

Banking official to speak

An executive director of the World Bank will speak in Eugene this afternoon on a project to establish a world economic order.

Earl Drake, the highest World Bank official to visit Oregon, will speak at the Valley River Inn, 4 p.m. today. Drake will speak in Portland this morning and will wind up a tour with the Eugene meeting.

The Eugene speech will also kick off a year-long project to acquaint the Northwest with Third World nation proposals for a new international economic order. Drake's Eugene appearance is primarily for community and civic leaders but the public is invited.

Tree cutting permits offered

The Siuslaw National Forest will begin selling permits Wednesday for cutting Christmas trees. Each permit costs $2 and entitles an individual to cut one tree. Other national forests have Christmas tree cutting programs in special areas.

For information about those programs call 687-6521.

The following areas in the Siuslaw National Forest will be closed to tree-cutters: Cascade Head Biosphere Reserve, Mt. Hebo, Sand Beach area south and west of Cape Lookout Highway, Marys Peak (any area off of Woods Creek Road or Marys Peak Road), all National Forest within the Oregon Dunes National Recreation Area, National Forest land west of Highway 101, and all designated roadless areas.

The Lane County Red Cross needs assistance in several volunteer service areas. On-the-job training will be provided for safety clerks and volunteer clerks at the chapter building. Photographers and people interested in a Red Cross speakers bureau are also needed. Interested persons should call Terry Rodriguez, at 344-5244.

Open house set at law school

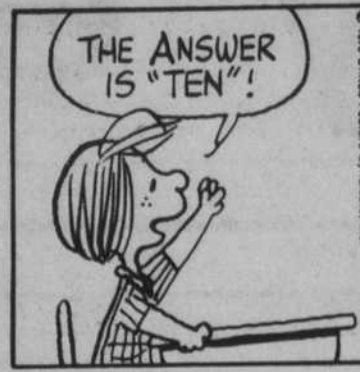

The University School of Law and the Minority Law Student Association will co-sponsor an open house for pre-law students today in Room 229 of the Law Center at 7:30 p.m.

The focus of the program is to inform minority and other students about law as a career, law school selection and the application process, says Robert Cortez, assistant director of the Minority Law Student Association.

Cortez says that minority students will be given "insights" into which schools offer the most financial aid, which have a stronger emphasis on affirmative action, and what kind of assistance minority students can expect once in law school.

Dean Chapin Clark, faculty members and minority law students will speak with question and answer sessions included. Refreshments and a tour of the law center will complete the program. For more information call 686-3879 or 686-3852.
