

Norway welcomes students

The International Summer School at the University of Oslo in Norway is preparing to welcome 300 students, teachers, and other professional people from 50 countries to its 33rd session beginning on June 23 and ending Aug. 23, 1979.

The summer school, organized in 1947 for American students who wanted to study in Norway, has steadily attracted a more and more diverse student body. About half of the 1978 participants were from the U.S. The rest came from 49 other nations, including both the People's Republic of China and the USSR.

English is the language of instruction. Undergraduate and graduate courses are offered in art, literature, history, economics, sociology, music, international relations, education and political science — all from a Norwegian perspective and taught by Norwegian faculty.

Special graduate courses for professionals in specific areas are Urban and Regional Planning, Medical Care and Public Health Services in Norway, and Physical Education in Scandinavia. The topics in the latter course range from training in glacier climbing to programs for the handicapped.

The University of Oslo certifies all courses, and credits are transferable to most U.S. and Canadian institutions. The basic fee for board, room, registration, and course related excursions for the six-week session varies from $800 to $1,100, depending on which courses are taken.

No tuition is paid by the students as this is covered by the Norwegian educational system. Two years of college are required for admission.

Residents of the U.S. and Canada can obtain a complete catalog and application form for the coming ISS session by request from: North American Admissions Office, Oslo International Summer School, St. Olaf College, Northfield, Minn., 55057.

Scientist directs study on solar energy potential

About 10 square miles of Oregon landscape might be capable of producing as much power as the Trojan nuclear plant, says University physics Prof. David McDaniels.

Any sunlight can be collected for heating and cooling, McDaniels says. But he says a minimum intensity level is necessary so that solar energy can be concentrated for the production of energy.

He says Oregon has an abundance of land which could be used for solar electrical generation. To prove this, the University will be monitoring sunlight intensity around the state with a network of stations operated by the University's Solar Energy Center.

Photographer to speak

Southern California photographer Lewis Baltz will give a lecture with slides on his current work on Monday, November 27, at 7:30 p.m. in the EMU.

He will also conduct a group discussion at 3 p.m. in Room 290 Lawrence Hall.

This lecture is sponsored by the Cultural Forum and the Photography at Oregon Gallery, Museum of Art, University of Oregon.

Lewis Baltz received his B.F.A. from San Francisco Art Institute and his M.F.A. from Claremont Graduate School, 1971. He was awarded a Guggenheim Fellowship in 1976. He has been a part-time instructor of photography and is currently on the visiting committee of the International Museum of Photography, Rochester, New York.

He has exhibited widely since 1970, both nationally and internationally, in numerous one-person and invitational group shows. This year he has had one-person exhibits at the Yarlow-Salzman Gallery, Toronto, Canada; the Castelli Uptown, New York, the Grapestake Gallery, San Francisco, and the University of Nevada at Reno.

His prints are in numerous permanent museum collections and he has been reviewed and discussed in numerous national magazines and newspapers.
