

Students knead to punch down rising food costs

University housing officials have asked dormitory residents not to waste food in an effort to combat the double-digit inflation that has driven food costs beyond the expectations of dorm money managers.

A flyer given 2,750 students last week noted that food used to prepare cafeteria meals is costing about 22 percent more now than it did a year ago.

"Based on previous inflation rates, we had budgeted for an approximate 6 percent difference," Housing Director, Philip Barnhart said.

ONLY TAKE
AS MUCH AS YOU CAN STOMACH!

"Things were going along pretty well as far as our predictions were concerned until around January of this year, when certain foods took a huge jump and then continued at this steep rate," he added.

The flyer asked students to take only as much food as they think they can eat, and at the same time outlined steps staff will take to save food.

"We will continue to buy the same high grade of food we always have, and will continue to offer the same number of choices we now do," Barnhart said. "However, we will look carefully at our menu pattern with an eye to reducing the number of times we serve items that have become extremely expensive."

PLEASE!! ONLY ONE BOWL OF FROOT LOOPS!

Food service from 6:45 a.m. to 2 p.m. and from 4 p.m. to 6:30 p.m. will continue, as will the "all you can eat" policy. Food service staff are trying to end food waste during preparation.

Barnhart asked students to reach a goal of no food left on trays to be thrown out, and to avoid taking food out for later snacks.

He said that he has recommended a 6.4 percent increase in room and board costs for next year. "We can hold the increases to that level."
