

hear and now

Arts and Entertainment

Thursday, April 26, 1979

A hair-raising art

Michael Black took a pinch from the pinnacle of white stuff on a nearby table and gave a few finishing tweaks to his latest work of art, Molly's hairdoo.

He appeared suddenly irritated as he noticed several spectators. "Get these people out of here," he cried. "Get them out. How do you expect an artist to work!"

American society is founded on hair. Hair represents economic class, personality, sex and race. Without it we are sterile and bald.

But until recently hair has been widely ignored as an art. Michael Black wants to change that attitude. Please turn to Page 4B.

