

Library friends host talk

A talk on "The Book Collector and the Scholar" will be featured when the Friends of the Library group at the University holds its annual dinner meeting tonight.

English Professor James Hart, director of the Bancroft Library at the University of California, Berkeley, will be the guest speaker. Hart is the author of several books, including the Oxford Companion to American Literature.

The sirloin steak dinner will be at Bev's Steak House, 1905 W. 6th Ave. at 7:30 p.m., with social hour at 6:30 p.m., and is open to the public. The cost is $8 per person, including gratuities.

A vice chairman-chairman elect and five Board of Commissioners members will be elected at the short business meeting.

Positions open on new student organization

University students interested in joining the new Student University Relations Council have until Sunday to submit their applications to the Office of the Vice President for Public Services.

Activities of the new organization would likely include such things as hosting campus guests, visiting with legislators, visiting with Oregonians at University booths at state fairs, fund raising projects for student scholarships, meeting with prospective students and running special events such as a possible Webfoot Day for high school students.

Application forms are available at the Office of Public Services in Room 110 Johnson Hall, or the Office of Community Services in Room 22 Susan Campbell Hall. Selection will be based on the application, an interview and recommendations. A small group of 20 students will be chosen and more will be added later.
