

Journalism students honored

Six students from the University's School of Journalism have received awards for outstanding performance in the 1978-79 school year. Honored were Leslie Clevenger, Marvin Fjordbeck, Laurel Hanson, Lee Sherman-Stadius, Lauren McKinley, and Ann Tamboline.

Clevenger was given the Emma McKinley Award for Outstanding Senior Woman, Fjordbeck was awarded the William G. Gurney Award for Outstanding Senior Man, and Hanson, a junior, received the Arlyn E. Cole Advertising Award. In addition, Sherman-Stadius was presented with the Warren C. Price Award for the best research paper written during the past year about the history of journalism, McKinley was given the T. Neil Taylor Award for the best thesis or terminal project, and the Harphan Award was awarded to Tamboline for the best paper by a foreign student.

UGETSU

UGETSU is one of the great classics of the Japanese cinema. An exotic film in every way, the story concerns the mysterious adventures that befall two peasants who live off their mundane existence and run off to seek new lives. One man seeks wealth, and the other strives to be a great Samurai warrior. But things don't go according to plan, as the hypnotic atmosphere of the film sweeps the viewer into its spell. Winner of the Venice Film Festival.

THE ANANDA MARGA SOCIETY PRESENTS

THE WAR GAME

One of the most unnerving films ever made, THE WAR GAME is an incredibly realistic portrayal of what existence would probably be like in the immediate aftermath of a nuclear attack. Originally commissioned by the BBC, it was quickly decided that the English people weren't ready to see what would REALLY happen after a nuclear bombing of their country. The film was banned from showing on TV, though it later won numerous honors, including an Academy Award as Best Documentary Feature.

ALSO

LA JET'EE

This highly-acclaimed French short-film is an engrossing cinematic journey into an uncertain future where fantasy and reality merge.
