

Ex-president will speak

Former Pres. Gerald Ford will visit the University Nov. 14 under the auspices of the American Enterprise Institute of Washington, D.C.

"Ford's visit will provide an opportunity for our own students and faculty to hear a former American president speak on the current political and economic scene, and we also expect many members of the community including high school students to turn out to hear him," Curtis Simic, University vice president for public services says.

Tentative plans call for Ford to meet with community and business leaders, speak to several University classes and attend a news conference as well as give a public address. The talk is tentatively set for mid-morning. Full details on the day-long Ford visit, being planned by the Office of Public Services, will be released when confirmed.

Ford speaks at some 10 college campuses each year as part of American Enterprise Institute's outreach program. The non-profit organization provides information to the public on public policy issues.
