

Chemists to speak

Dr. Christian B. Anfisen, a National Institutes of Health researcher and one of three Americans who shared the 1972 Nobel Prize in chemistry, and Dr. Thomas Merigan, a clinical chemist at Stanford University, will speak today in Room 331, Science II, on campus. Merigan will lecture at 3 p.m. and Anfisen at 4 p.m.

Groups plan protest

Local citizens and students will express their opposition to oil monopolies today when a recruiting representative from Mobil Oil will be at the University talking to students about a career with Mobil Oil.

Various local groups, including Students for a Nuclear-Free Future, the Democratic Socialist Organizing Committee, Live Without Trident and the Trojan

Decommissioning Alliance, will participate in picketing and leafletting while Murray Mendenhall, a recruiter for Mobil Oil, talks to students inside the Geology building.

Leafletting will take place all day and a political statement of opposition to oil monopolies will be read to Mendenhall at 12:30 p.m. outside the Geology building.
