BUGSY MALONE

This comedy is unlike any other ever made. A gangster musical set in 1929 New York City, it is a world of would-be hoodlums, showgirls, and dreamers. However, the entire film is played by child stars, including Jodi Foster (TAXI DRIVER), whose entourage includes G-Men whose machine guns shoot whipped cream!

ALLEGRO NON TROPPO

ALLEGRO NON TROPPO is, on one level, a parody of FANTASIA; but the film goes beyond parody to become an exceptional film in its own right. Director Bruno Bozetto displays his unique animation genius in a very creative integration of music and image. One critic called this a cross between YELLOW SUBMARINE and FANTASIA with a dash of Fellini.

THE GRATEFUL DEAD MOVIE

The ultimate in concert films. THE GRATEFUL DEAD vividly captures the feeling of the band, its music and the group's relationship with its audiences. Jerry Garcia served as editorial director of the film and is largely responsible for the perfection of the film's sound recording. The band plays many of their best songs, among them: "Truckin'", "Sugar Magnolia", and "Casey Jones". This film shows "there is nothing like a Dead Concert." A special sound system will be used to enhance your listening pleasure.

Library hours hinge on budget, work-study staff

University Librarian Don Smith says he's "surprised at the lack of negative response" to the library's shortened hours, but warns that this year's calm might not last through 1981.

Smith says the budget problem "will get worse before it gets better." The problem, he says, is to attract enough work-study students to fill 70 percent of the library's jobs.

Right now the library employs only 60 percent work-study students, which means 40 percent of the workers are budgeted staff.

Budgeted staff members cost the library 100 percent of each salary dollar, while work-study students cost the library just 20 percent, with the remaining 80 percent paid by the federal government in student grant money.

The Oregon Legislature allocates funds to cover 30 percent of the work force, with additional funds to cover 20 percent of the money needed to pay the expected 70 percent work-study force.

Smith says the legislature's expectation of a 70 percent work-study force is unrealistic.

He would like to see the legislature allocate enough budget money to employ 50 percent of the workers, with the remainder picked up by the federal government. He estimates an additional $125,000 per year is needed to implement his idea.

As it stands now, the lack of work-study students, coupled with a retroactive wage increase from $2.94 to $3.16 an hour, has forced the library to cut hours.

Rosemary Batori, library business manager, says the library may be forced to cut back other services unless more work-study students are hired. "Almost all of the reshelving is done by students," she says, "and ultimately the student across campus is going to suffer when books are missing."
