New special program assists handicapped

A new program to help teachers of the severely handicapped update their skills or prepare for a supervisory position is now available at the University College of Education. The program, a standard endorsement for teaching the severely handicapped, focuses on skills for independent living. Teachers are prepared to teach handicapped people skills, which range from feeding themselves to using public transportation.

In addition, students learn curriculum design and techniques to integrate severely handicapped persons into their community.

"What we were teaching five years ago may not apply any more because the field of special education is evolving so rapidly. In fact, materials for teaching the severely handicapped often do not exist," says Barbara Wilcox, assistant professor in the Division of Special Education and Rehabilitation.

The new standard endorsement program, authorized by the Oregon Teacher Standards and Practices Commission this fall, is the second step for teachers of the severely handicapped.

Nominations are now being accepted for the University's 1981 Distinguished Service Awards.

The awards, presented annually since 1956 at June commencement, honor persons "who by their knowledge and skills have made a significant contribution to the cultural development of Oregon or society as a whole." They are awarded as an alternative to the honorary degrees that many colleges and universities grant.

Not more than three awards can be given in any one year. Current members of the University faculty, staff and student body are not eligible for nomination.

Persons submitting nominations should provide the name, address and specialty, a biographical sketch and the name and address of one or more references for each person nominated.

Individuals may nominate more than one person. The name of those previously nominated but not chosen can be re-submitted.

Deadline for 1981 nominations is Jan. 9. Send nominations to the Distinguished Service Award Committee, Office of the President, 110 Johnson Hall, University of Oregon, Eugene, OR 97403.
