

Architecture school fights studio squeeze

By MARIAN GREEN
Of the Emerald

Too little money is a constant worry for most University programs, but in the architecture department, money worries have sent faculty and students back to the drawing board.

When the Legislature lopped $2.7 million off the University's budget during a special session last summer, new building projects for the architecture department were left in design stages.

The most immediate problem is overcrowding in architecture design studios. The number of students per studio has increased by 15 percent to 20 percent, says Dean Robert Harris of the architecture and allied arts school.

"The increase is significant because there are a lot of students in a class that's designed for a one-to-one kind of relationship," Harris says. "Under normal circumstances, this is about a half-hour per student."

"Now the amount of time professors have available to spend with each student in class is less, but we've found our professors just spend more time (out of class) with them."

But the overcrowding does bother Samuels.

"It makes me frustrated because I know it limits the professors themselves from making the education the way they'd want it to be."

Department head Jerry Finrow believes "it's made everybody angry and intense over and above what it would be if they were teaching just an additional lecture course."

But professors having less time for students is only one part of the overcrowding problem, Harris says.

"A lot of equipment is quite makeshift. Maybe 50 to 75 students' drafting tables are sawhorses and plywood," he says.

"The desperate aspect is that the governor's budget doesn't include funding for the building. That means we'll be in this God-awful situation for another four years."

In addition, visiting lecturers in all six departments of the school have been "almost entirely eliminated," according to Harris.

"That's going to be a real loss," Samuels says. "Those were good talks."

Some workshops and short courses also have been canceled, and at least one major lecture class that had an enrollment of more than 270 students has been canceled. The lecture course is a requirement for some majors in the architecture and allied arts school.

EMU CULTURAL FORUM proudly presents the witty and candid BBC production of

I, CLAUDIUS
"It's about a family business call ruling the world." Last week's episodes introduced us to the Caesars - the emperor Augustus and his wife, the fiendishly evil Livia, the grandparents of the young and fatherless Claudius. Livia is plotting and poisoning all who would stand in the way of her son Tiberius and the throne. In #3, WAITING IN THE WINGS, Livia manoeuvres the banishment of Julia, Augustus' daughter, now only her sons stand in the way of Livia and Tiberius. We come to know young Claudius in #4 WHAT SHALL WE DO ABOUT CLAUDIUS? Him limp, twitch and stutter make him the butt of the family's jokes, but the famed historian Livy recognizes his intelligence. Livy advises Claudius to play the fool if he is to survive in bloody Rome.

If you missed the first 2 episodes it's not too late to catch up on the fascinating story of Claudius and his notorious family. Brief plot summaries of each episode are posted in the window of Suite 2, EMU.

TIME AFTER TIME
Starring Malcolm McDowell and Mary Steenburgen. This thrilling, macabre story begins in Victorian England, just before the turn of the century. Following the interaction of H.G. Wells, the noted science fiction writer, and his friend, Dr. John Stevenson, Wells discovers that Dr. Stevenson is the notorious Jack the Ripper. Chased by the police, he escapes in Wells' newly invented time machine. Wells follows Dr. Stevenson to the year 1979 in a dazzling journey in the time machine and pursues him through modern day San Francisco.

THE LACEMAKER
Swiss director Claude Goretta's THE LACEMAKER is a haunting romance about an ill-fated love affair between a middle-class university student and an inexperienced shop girl who meet on the deserted Normandy beaches during the off season. Upon their return to Paris, their romance collsaps under the weight of class and intellectual distinctions. Director Goretta paints a moving romance in the style of the old Dutch masters with exquisite and delicate detail.
