Art prof oversees treasures of the Orient

Ellen Johnston Laing, University art history professor, has been appointed the art museum's first curator of Oriental art, says museum director Richard Paulin.

Laing's research interests have focused on the history of Chinese painting. She will assist in planning special Oriental art exhibitions.

"Having access to these materials will enable me to use them for lecture classes and seminar teaching," Laing says. "I'm excited about planning and working with the exhibitions as a means of enhancing public knowledge and appreciation of Oriental art.

The curatorship carries no additional salary and will be held concurrently with Laing's regular faculty position.

Laing came to the University in 1979 as the Maude Kerns Distinguished Professorship in Oriental Art. She previously taught art history at Wayne State University and at the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor.
