

Reagan assures South Korea of support

WASHINGTON (AP) — Pres. Ronald Reagan promised South Korea on Monday that the United States will maintain its troop strength in the Pacific region and its long commitment to defend South Korea "against aggression."

Reagan told the visiting South Korean president, Chun Doo-hwan, that "our special bond of freedom and friendship is as strong today" as it was 30 years ago.

During remarks following a one-hour meeting with Chun, Reagan made clear that his administration will give high priority to its relationship with South Korea, which had suffered strains during the four years of the Carter administration.

By inviting Chun for a visit ahead of leaders of major U.S. allies, Reagan also showed his administration has confidence in the Chun government, which seized power in a military coup following the assassination of Pres. Park Chung-hee in October of 1979.

The United States maintains a military force of about 39,000 in South Korea. Former Pres. Jimmy Carter withdrew several thousand U.S. troops in 1979 to the dismay of the Korean military, and Chun wanted assurances that Reagan wouldn't resume a withdrawal policy.

Speaking to reporters with Chun at his side, Reagan said he has assured the Korean leader that "the United States will remain a reliable and Pacific partner and we shall maintain the strength of our forces in the Pacific."

Reagan said U.S. Asian allies, including South Korea, Japan, Australia and New Zealand, "will have our continued support as our European allies have."

For his part, Chun said: "President Reagan has given his firm assurances that the United States has no intention of withdrawing the American forces in Korea. I am pleased that the present level of the United States military presence in Korea will be maintained."

Chun said U.S. forces provide "a vital and indispensable contribution to not only peace in Korea, but peace and tranquility in the Northeast Asia region."

Reagan and Chun met for an hour, and then Reagan held a luncheon in Chun's honor in the White House Red Room. Also attending the luncheon were Vice Pres. George Bush, Secretary of State Alexander Haig, Jr., National Security Adviser Richard Allen and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger.
