Human Rights in Crisis: Latin America

LECTURE ON NICARAGUA
THURSDAY, FEB. 19 4-5:30 PM
EMU BALLROOM
NICARAGUA UPDATE

Throughout Nicaragua, 1980 was a year of literacy, increasing equality for women, and economic reconstruction.
 In a five month National Literacy Crusade, more than 100,000 volunteers, including 60,000 high school students, were enlisted to teach 420,000 people to read and write. In the second phase of the program, 40,000 star students began to teach 40,000 more. The illiteracy rate fell from over 50% in March to 12.9% in August. The follow-up effort aims to cut it to 4% in three years.
 The reading primer was based on the educational theory of Paulo Freire, a Brazilian teacher and adult literacy consultant for the World Council of Churches in Geneva, Switzerland.

Directing the campaign was Fernando Cardenal, a Jesuit priest. All over the country, it opened with a special Mass in the local parishes; and the effort was strongest where there were strong parish priests.
 The Association of Nicaraguan Women Luisa Amanda Espinosa (AMNLAE), with 30,000 membes, worked to attain full economic, social, and political equality for women. It helped set up community kitchens, laundries, dispensaries, and free day care centers for all working mothers. It has created center for the 40,000 war orphans.

This year, AMNLAE is concentrating on a preventive health campaign. 46% of Nicaraguan children die before the age of five. Over half of those who survive their fifth birthday are malnourished, and the average life expectancy is 52. Local AMNLAEs are teaching nutrition, first aid, health, and child care classes, distributing extra food to children, expecting mothers, and the elderly, and organizing volunteers to dig latrines.

Nicaragua's mixed economy made considerable progress toward recovering from the shambles left by the civil war. 99% of the planned production targets were met; the targets for rice, corn, and beans were over-fulfilled. The planned revenue from coffee exports was also obtained, in spite of a five-year low in world coffee prices and inflated prices for imported fertilizers and insecticides. Unemployment plummeted from 32% to 17%; if the 1981 target is reached, the unemployment rate will again fall to production of cotton, meat, and especially industrial goods. Industrial production has been seriously handicapped by soaring oil import price: 100 bushels of coffee bought 17 barrels of oil in 1977 but will only buy 2 1/2 today.

Further reconstruction in 1981 will be slowed by the suspension on Jan. 15 of $75 million U.S. loan to Nicaragua's private sector. The loan was suspended in response to an alleged invasion of El Salvador from Nicaragua on Jan. 14 by 100 troops in five boats. The charge was made by Salvadorean President Napoleon Duarte and repeated by former U.S. Ambassador Robert White. No prisoners or bodies have been produced in evidence. According to Christopher Dickey, writing from San Salvador in the Jan. 20 Washington Post, U.S. officials now are saying white "no longer thinks the evidence about it as 'compelling' as the day he spoke." But the funds have not been restored.

Marta Meszaros' WOMEN
 The Hungarian director Marta Meszaros is perhaps one of the most important directors working in Hungary today. Meszaros' outstanding quality is her ability to invest woman-woman friendships with the same kind of complexity and richness that a director like Wim Wenders brings to his men. WOMEN is about the friendship which springs up between a passionate young rebel and an older woman who is just beginning to realize the inadequacy of her well-ordered married life. SUBTITLES
