

Outdoor school offers study in Wyoming

Environmental science or outdoor studies majors can gain practical experience through the Sundance Wilderness Center's study program.

Through the program, students spend a term studying on a ranch in Jackson Hole, Wyo.

The ranch location doesn't mean students are on vacation from school, however. Environment-related classes are held daily.

Michelle Culper and Michael Sauls say they founded Sundance to offer comprehensive study of the outdoor environment from a "holistic viewpoint."

Sundance has one full-time professor, Ted Major, retired founder of the Teton Science School, and several guest lecturers each term.

Culper says she hopes to get a dozen guest lecturers for spring term.

The ranch, located on 125 acres near Teton National Park, is surrounded on three sides by wilderness, Culper says. Elk, moose and big horn sheep are often found grazing on the surrounding land.

Culper, who used to run a white water and kayak school, says spring term students will learn snow and river skills. Students will take a raft trip on the Green River in Canyonland National Park and a backpacking trip in Teton National Park.

Sundance accepts 16 upper-division students per term. Cost per student is $1,985.

Sundance representatives will show slides in Room 108 EMU at noon today.

It isn't everyday somebody asks your opinion... and then listens

During this month, Lane Transit District is holding a series of public workshops... The purpose of these workshops is simple: We'd like to hear your ideas for making bus service in Eugene-Springfield even better than it is today... It's an opportunity to work with LTD: and to make the bus system work for you.

This is an open invitation... everybody is welcome. Bring your family... or a friend. And let's work together for an effective mass transit program in Eugene-Springfield.
