Portland couple donates presidential portraits

A visual gift of Americana in the form of 38 presidential portraits has been given to the University by a Portland couple.

The acquisition complements the University's collection of presidential signatures in the Library's Special Collections.

The collection of oil paintings, titled "Gallery of Presidents," was executed by Lawrence Williams, a contemporary portrait artist. The portraits were commissioned by the United States Bicentennial Commission in 1974 and were completed in 1975.

The original set of portraits, one of six sets done by Williams, toured the country extensively during the Bicentennial celebration in 1976, says University Foundation special programs director Hope Press-man.

Where the paintings will be displayed has not been decided, Pressman says, but several options for the educational use of the collection by public agencies and University departments are being explored.
