State board begins interviews today

Acting University Pres. Paul Olum will be interviewed this afternoon in Portland as one of three finalists for the position of University president.

The State Board of Higher Education will select the successor to William Boyd, who was president for five years. Boyd resigned last June to accept a job as head of the private Johnson Foundation in Racine, Wis.

The board is expected to announce its choice soon after the candidates are interviewed, according to board representatives.

Olum and the two other finalists were named last week by state system Chancellor Roy Lieuallen.

The other two candidates are Robin Winks, a history professor at the Berkeley College of Yale University at New Haven, Conn., and Rudolph Weingartner, dean of arts and sciences at Northwestern University at Evanston, Ill.

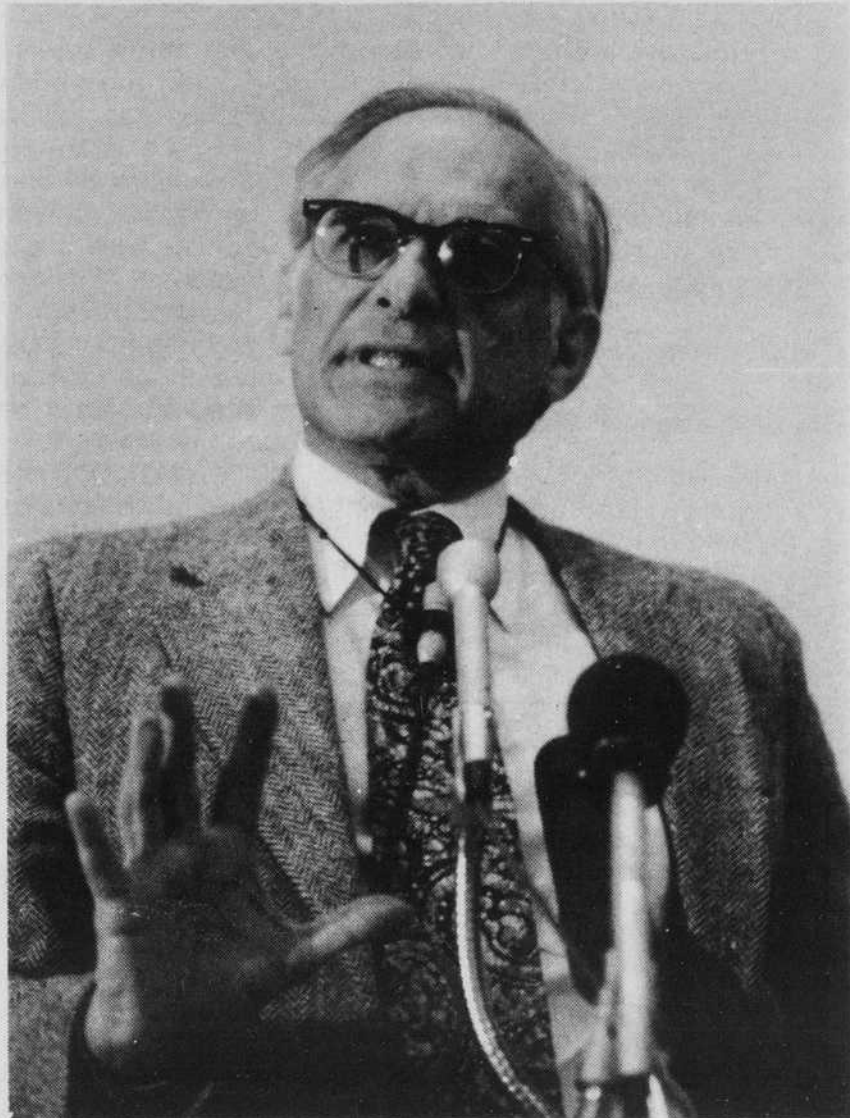

A fourth candidate was suggested to the board, but the candidate withdrew his name.

Olum will be the first interviewed in a series of executive session meetings at Portland State University today and Wednesday. Olum will be interviewed at 1:30 p.m. today, and Winks at 4:45 p.m. Weingartner will be interviewed at 9 a.m. Wednesday.

Olum, a mathematician, graduated from Harvard in 1940. He received a master's degree from Princeton in 1942 and a doctorate from Harvard in 1947.

He joined the University administration as vice president for academic affairs in 1976. He was formerly with the natural sciences college at the University of Texas in Austin.

Olum worked as a physicist
