

University proposes changes in administrative rulemaking

The University has proposed amendments to several sections of the Oregon Administrative Rules which govern University rulemaking as well as changes to a rule concerning grievance procedure.

The rulemaking amendments would adjust the University's rulemaking procedure to conform with the most recent revisions of the Oregon attorney general's "Model of Rules Procedure."

Other rule changes outline grievance procedures for employees and students when claims of discrimination based on extraneous considerations are made to the University administration.

Both proposals delete obsolete information and reflect current name designations of affected officers and units of the University.

"The amendment will become effective upon filing with the Office of the Secretary of State after the University reviews any comments from the public and makes a determination to promulgate them subsequent to April 30, 1981," said Ray Hawk, vice president for administration and finance.

Copies of both amendment proposals are available for public inspection during regular business hours at a number of campus locations including the Office of the President.
