

Earthweek features ape talk

A slide show and discussion of the endangered mountain gorillas of central Africa will highlight today's Earthweek activities.

The presentation by Stuart Perlmeter, one of many scientists and researchers working to save the gorillas from extinction, will begin at 7:30 p.m. in the EMU Ballroom.

The mountain gorilla is the largest in the family of great apes and lives only in the Virunga Mountains near the borders of Zaire, Uganda and Rwanda.

The plight of the mountain gorilla is featured in this month's issue of National Geographic magazine and was the subject of an April 8 National Geographic television program. For the past 13 years, National Geographic has funded research conducted by Dr. Dian Fossey.

Fossey says the gorillas are threatened by poachers who kill them for profit and sport and by the encroachment of humanity on the gorillas' natural habitat.

Also today and tomorrow, free bicycle-repair workshops will be held outside the EMU. The Outdoor Program is conducting touring workshops today at 7 p.m. and Wednesday at 4 p.m. to discuss bicycle set-up and equipment and show slides of cycle touring in the Puget Sound area.

A demonstration of making paper from old paper and plants will be held today from 11:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m. outside Suite 1 of the EMU. At 1:30 p.m., Margaret Lambie will discuss small-scale hydroelectric power in Oregon.

Lauri Marker from the Oregon Wildlife Safari will bring big cats and a wildlife film to the EMU Forum Room at 2:30 p.m.

THE RETURN OF THE SECAUSCUS 7

Rarely does an independent American film receive such attention and praise as Secaucus 7, making just about every "10 best" film list of 1980 in the nation. In his directional debut, 20-year-old John Sayles has fashioned a highly personal, perfectly realized film about the reunion of old friends, former political activists of the 60's who are now turning 20. They reminisce, play together, make love, talk about making love, re-define their relationships and try to come to grips with the future while at the same time holding on to their experiences of the past. The naturalness of cast is irresistible. Make way to discover these important new talents.
