

IFC approves reduction in athletic department fee

A plan that would reduce the student fee portion of the athletic department budget has been submitted to the University administration.

The Incidental Fee Committee unanimously passed a proposal Thursday night that would reduce the athletic department's portion of the incidental fee from $17 to $12 per term. The administration and the State Board of Higher Education raised the fee from $5 at the beginning of this school year.

Under the proposal, students would make up for the revenue taken from the athletic budget by paying $2.50 more for football and basketball tickets. If student attendance at the games provided more than the expected revenue, the extra cash would revert to the incidental fee "carry over" account, which can be used to lower the fee the following year.

Tickets to all other sporting events still would be free.

The proposal was delivered to the administration shortly after the meeting. University Pres. Paul Olum has said he approves of the proposal in general.

The IFC passed another proposal that would change the funding method for the Recreation and Intramurals program. The program now receives approximately $2,600 in incidental fees and $90,000 from the physical education department.

Under the new proposal, half of physical education's contribution to the intramurals program would be put into a "transfer account" along with $45,000 of the incidental fee money earmarked for the athletic department.

The money would then be paid out to the athletic department and intramurals program as it's always been.

Agencies offer credits, stipend

University students can earn upper-division credit and a stipend while working for a local community service agency in the University-Community Action program.

Through UCA, juniors, seniors and graduate students can gain practical work experience and University credit while working in Lane County community service agencies.

"UCA can be an integral part of a student's university education," says UCA director Anita Runyan. "It's more than a work experience because theories are applied and problem solving is initiated."

The program — offered through the Community Service and Public Affairs school — gives credit to students from any major, but it is specifically designed for students interested in human services and administration.

After meeting with a UCA staff member, applicants are matched with agencies. The student and agency representatives explore possible opportunities and agree on job responsibilities.

Students work 32 hours a week in the agency for a nine month period. Many participants can receive upper-division credit that meets requirements in their major.

And participants earn a $175.00 monthly stipend.

Application deadline is May 1. Application forms are available at Hendricks Hall.

Board reconsiders proposals

The University's proposed doctorate degree program in computer and information science will be reconsidered by the State Board of Higher Education on Friday at Oregon College of Education.

The CIS Ph.D. program would begin in the 1981-82 academic year.

The department eventually expects to enroll 15 students and award three doctoral degrees each year.

The University computer and information science program presently offers a bachelor's program and a two-year master's degree program.

The doctorate program would require a minimum of three years of full-time study beyond the bachelor's degree.

Oregon State University offers the only other computer science graduate program in the state.

The board will also reconsider a proposed Oregon State off-campus, part-time bachelor's degree program of studies in Central Oregon.

The program's prospective students would be those unable to leave the Central Oregon region to enter a full-time program at a state university campus.

The program has been planned in cooperation with Central Oregon Community College which will provide classroom space, academic advising and library services to the off-campus students.

The meeting will be held in the OCE Education Building, Room 127, beginning at 10:30 a.m.

"That's exactly the point." Leeman agreed. "The statutes now give the board presidents and faculty certain responsibility. This bill proposes to take out one of the methods by which those responsibilities are carried out."

"Basically," Monroe said, "you don't want the students involved in this at all."

"Involved is not the question, sir."

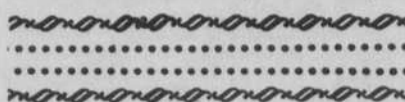

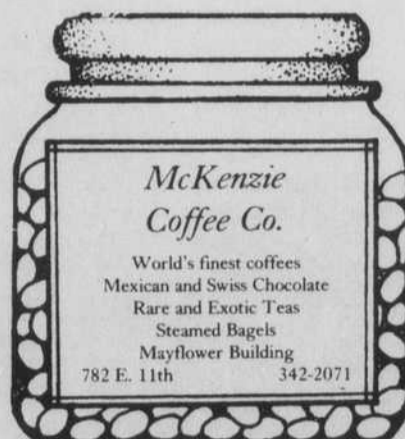

"You don't want the students in control?"

"That is correct."

Interior Secretary James Watt

is considering granting offshore leases for oil drilling off the California coast. At his weekly press conference Thursday, Gov. Vic Atiyeh was asked why he hadn't taken advantage of an invitation to offer his opinion.

Atiyeh acknowledged that such leases are being discussed. "In all those there are some that contend the shelf runs up to Oregon, it is not an area in which there is to be drilling. For me to make a recommendation either to Secretary Watt or the governor of California, I'm not sure is entirely appropriate."
