

Steelers draft Hinkle while others wait

Oregon linebacker Bryan Hinkle received his nod from the National Football League Wednesday, as the Duck senior was picked up by the Pittsburgh Steelers.

The Steelers drafted Hinkle as the eight selection in the sixth round, about where it was expected the Oregon linebacker would go.

Three other Ducks, Vince Goldsmith, Kevin McGill and Neil Elshire, who sat out the season because of injury, are given a good chance of being chosen early today as the NFL begins its final six rounds.

Hinkle was not available for comment Tuesday evening, but an Associated Press report said the Steelers organization was pleased with the choice, calling the linebacker a good addition to a strong ballclub.

In his four-year career with the Ducks, Hinkle, 6-2 and 205 pounds, was named Pacific-10 Defensive Player of the Week several times, including three times as a junior despite playing only part of the season.

Goldsmith, named the Pac-10's outstanding defensive lineman last fall, has a good chance of being picked early, "but I'm not counting on it," he said Tuesday.

"It's not something I'm going to worry about."

Goldsmith, 5-11 and 230 pounds, says his size shouldn't be a handicap. "At least I think so — but they seem to be concerned about it."

Goldsmith also made the Pac-10 first team in 1979 and 1980.

Oregon's second draft possibility, Kevin McGill, said he was hoping to go in Tuesday's draft. "But I should go the first thing tomorrow."

McGill, a 6-7, 266-pound offensive tackle, was the biggest man on the Duck roster last season. "I expect to go as a pass blocker-tackle," he said.

"I don't care what team, I just want a chance to go out there and show them I can do it."

"I didn't get serious about football until I was in college," the senior tackle said. "Now I feel I'm just getting started. before I was just learning — now I'm ready to get in there and really play."

"I have a few more good years before me."

The final member of the Duck draft trio, Neil Elshire, didn't play last season because of a knee injury. But as a junior, the 6-5, 246-pound defensive end joined Goldsmith as the Ducks one-two front line punch.

Despite being sidelined last season, he is ready to return to action, Elshire said.

No one is placing all their bets on the NFL's draft system to pick them today, "but it sure would be nice," said McGill. "I know I'm good enough, we're all good enough."
