Visiting Islamic studies expert will deliver three lectures

Islam's nature, hopes and problems will be discussed by a Temple University professor as part of the University's Distinguished Visiting Lecturers Program.

Isma'il al Faruqi, a Temple University religion professor since 1968, is a noted expert on Islamic culture and has published many books and articles on the subject.

Al Faruqi will deliver three lectures.

He will speak in the EMU Ballroom tonight at 7:30 p.m. on "Islam and Judaism."

The series continues Wednesday evening — same time and place — with a lecture on "Islam and Christianity."

On Thursday, al Faruqi will meet with University students and faculty members at the Koinonia

Center, 1414 Kincaid St., from 3 to 5 p.m. He will end his lecture series with a talk on "Islam and Secularism" at 7:30 p.m. in the EMU Ballroom.

After earning a Ph.D from Indiana University, al Faruqi was a Rockefeller Foundation Fellow at McGill University in Montreal and taught there. He also has held visiting professorships in seven countries in Asia and Africa.

The recipient of scholarships from the Spalding Trust and the Fulbright Program, among others, al Faruqi is active in many Muslim organizations in North America and is on the editorial board of seven scholarly journals.

His lecture series is being sponsored by the University religious studies department.

Psych course enters 'real world'

Those tired of overcrowded classrooms may find the psychology department's year-long course entitled "Advanced Applied Psychology" of interest.

For those unfamiliar with the term "applied," it means a combination of academia and the real world.

Last year, psychology masters degree students and advanced undergraduates worked with such diverse services as the City of Eugene,

Sacred Heart General Hospital and Pape Bros., Inc., in improving employer-employee relations, job design and management.

The course is open to students in related fields, such as business, management or Community Service and Public Affairs.

Students interested in joining the class fall term should contact Susan Petereson, Room 272 Straub Hall, 686-4954, before the end of spring term.
