Fall workshop planned

It's not too early to start thinking about the next school year, the Academic Advising Office believes. Academic advising and student services division counselors will conduct a program for planning fall term on May 27 at 3:30 p.m. in Room 164 Oregon Hall. The workshop is designed to give students guidance in assessing their academic progress and in planning an appropriate fall schedule. The academic advising office holds several workshops each term to address questions students commonly ask. Topics covered in the spring term workshops included pre-law academic planning, secondary education and writing careers, environmentally oriented majors and the University's grading system.
