Oregon selective service opens draft board spots

By MIKE ANDERSON
Of the Emerald

Oregon Selective Service officials will choose Lane County's draft board later this summer in accordance with a congressional mandate.

Applications are available in Suite 4 of the EMU to anyone over 18 wishing to serve as a board member.

At least five persons will be appointed in Lane County, although University Veterans Association Director Dave Isenberg says that because of the area's size, seven to 11 board members probably will be selected.

If conscription returns, the draft board would handle induction appeals, including cases involving conscientious objectors and student deferments, Isenberg says.

"I think it would be really appropriate if hundreds, maybe thousands of applications were received by the board from students," Isenberg says. "I encourage people to apply because it's a relevant system to get involved in."

Colonel Robert Ball, the state's Selective Service director, will head the screening and selection committee. All applications should be sent to: Oregon State Selective Service Headquarters, 817 SW Church Street, Dallas, Ore., 97338, no later than June 31.

Technically, Pres. Ronald Reagan should approve all draft board applicants, but Isenberg says Reagan merely will "rubber stamp" the state committee's selections.

Congress has ordered that draft boards be set up around the nation, even though the draft has not been revived.

"It's obvious that registration proceeds the draft, and we've moved that much closer to the time when conscription is going to begin," Isenberg says. "It's just another confirmation."

Isenberg says he opposes the reinstatement of the draft. While there are problems with the volunteer system, "starting up the draft again is totally the wrong direction," he says.

"The problem with the system is that the military cannot keep people in the service once they're in, and bringing back the draft will still not solve this problem. The solution is to make people want to stay after they've gotten in."

There are three major steps involved in a draft, the first being registration. Next comes classification — assignment to various positions in the military service.

The final step is induction — the formal entry into the armed forces.

The draft board will not actually begin to operate until the final steps are ready, Isenberg says.
