To find authentic barbeque ribs, you can drive to San Francisco.

Or go to Perry's on Pearl.

San Francisco has some famous downtown saloons. They are elegant, yet comfortable, too. A couple like the "Firehouse" and the "Smokepit" are renowned for barbeque ribs.

Not the kind found in a fast food outlet. But the kind of ribs calling for a generations-old southern recipe.

Add all this up and you have the very inspiration for Perry's on Pearl.

Perry's ribs are extra-large beef short ribs, not bare bones. They, along with barbeque pork back ribs and Oregon grown chicken, are hickory-smoked and basted with a spicy Western-style barbeque sauce during the cooking process.

Your first bite will signal your taste buds that this is "Hog Heaven". And you will be ready for more.

Each order comes with baked beans, creamy cole slaw and homemade combread.

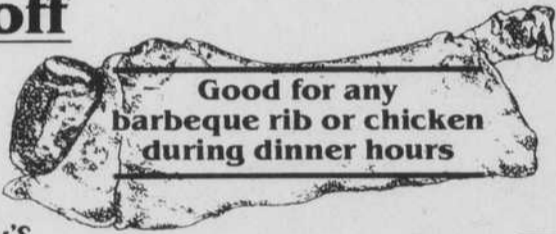

So the next time you or your family want a dinner of authentic barbeque ribs, you have two choices. Drive to San Francisco. Or go to Perry's on Pearl... the best place north of the Golden Gate serving authentic barbeque ribs.

Give our introductory offer below a try. Soon.

Yoshiko Uchida is the author of more than 20 books that have been credited with improving Japanese-American relations. Two of her books — "Journey to Topaz" and "Journey Home" — document the experiences of Japanese-American families who were sent to internment camps during World War II.

Uchida lived through the internment experience herself. She received her degree in absentia from the University of California at Berkeley because in 1942 her family was sent first to a California race track and then to a relocation center in Topaz, Utah. She was released in June, 1943, when she received a fellowship to Smith College.
