

Inflation threatens Korea, University alumnus says

South Korea's economic miracle may be coming to an end.

Speaking Monday at the University Law School, freelance journalist Tim Shorrock said South Korea faces a deepening economic crisis that threatens to boil over into a political crisis.

Shorrock, who visited Korea in February and talked to government officials, students and opposition leaders there, said Korea's 20-year economic boom is petering out.

In the early 1970s, the Korean government started a crash program to build up heavy industries such as steel and cement, said Shorrock, who holds a degree in Asian Studies from the University. But the massive capital investments needed to finance that development, coupled with the rising costs of imported oil and heavy defense expenditures, have caused an inflationary spiral, he said.

Because Korea imports more than it exports, the country has suffered an enormous trade deficit in recent years, Shorrock said.

The inflation rate in Korea in 1980 hovered between 40 and 50 percent, and the nation's trade deficit approached $5 billion.

Korea's economic problems have caused a rising tide of worker unrest that has been vigorously and sometimes violently repressed by the current regime of Chun Doo Hwan, Shorrock said.

The Chun government drafted a new constitution that in effect gave the government complete control over the press, he said. Radio and TV stations were consolidated under government control, and all press stories were subject to pre-publication censorship, he added.

"There are very few investigative journalism stories."

But Shorrock noted the new constitution really was aimed at the trade unions.

The Chun government's occasional reliance on force to quell demonstrations especially has angered many Koreans, Shorrock said.

In May 1980 government troops crushed an uprising in the town of Kwangju, where a week earlier the townspeople had driven riot troops out of town.

According to eyewitnesses, riot troops bayoneted both student demonstrators and on-lookers, Shorrock said.

About 170 people died in that uprising, according to a Korean government report. Some diplomats and residents have estimated that more than four times that number actually died, and the Associated Press estimated 270.

THE de Frisco's TRADITION

"Building a legend among Eugene's beer drinkers"

1852

"Honest" Henry Meigs, alias "Don Enrique de Frisco," developer of San Francisco's North Beach area, opens San Francisco's famous Bush St. Music Hall. The de Frisco's tradition is born.

1854

Meigs splits for Tahiti loaded with $17,000 worth of wine and gourmet delicacies, after appropriating over $1,000,000 from city treasury.

1877

"Don Enrique" dies in Peru a multi-millionaire builder of the famous railway system over the Andes that "couldn't be built". To celebrate the completion, Meigs threw perhaps the most extravagant party ever - a five steamship cruise - costing 4-5,000,000 in today's dollars.

1977

On the 100th anniversary of Meig's death, Dick Meigs, great, great nephew of the "beloved rogue," opens Eugene's de Frisco's, dedicated to the memory and style of his illustrious ancestor. The tavern featured Eugene's first serious selection of imported beers in a traditional atmosphere of solid oak and brass that would have made "Honest Henry" feel right at home. Rosewood backgammon tables were built to exacting specifications in memory of Uncle Henry's highly refined sporting instincts, and darts were introduced.

1978

de Frisco's introduces world famous Heineken and Guinness Stout on draft to the Eugene area. Among the many distinguished bottled beers introduced to Eugene at de Frisco's during this time were Elephant Malt Liquor, Watney's and Pilsner Urquell, the original pilsner beer.

1978

de Frisco's completes the expansion of Eugene's Landmark tavern in an attempt to better meet the demands of the beer drinking public. de Frisco's also starts hosting Eugene City Backgammon Championships annually.

1979

de Frisco's adds to it's fine assortments, Champagne on tap, and Bass ale, also on tap. Bottle beers introduced for the first time in the Eugene area include Moosehead Lager, Orangeboom, Foster's from Australia, and Samual Smith out of England's oldest brewery. Weekly backgammon tournaments begin every Monday Night.

1980

John Courage, a fine English pilsner is added on tap. Dart tournaments begin every Sunday Night, and a dart challenge match with Portland's finest begins. Eugene loses the first challenge and owner Dick Meigs is "pied".

TODAY

Dick Meigs and his dedicated staff carry on the de Frisco's tradition, serving the world's outstanding beers to Eugene's discriminating drinkers...and Meigs is practicing his dart game so he is not "pied" in the next challenge match with Portland.
