University profs win grant funds

Thirteen University faculty members will receive nearly $30,000 in Faculty Research Awards for study to be conducted this summer and next year.

The grants are intended as "seed money" to assist young faculty members with "new lines of research and projects which may lead to application for continued outside funding," says Fred Wilhelm, award program coordinator and assistant to the University graduate school dean.

Due to limited funds, applications for summer awards were accepted from assistant professors and untenured associate professors only, Wilhelm says. Of 36 who applied for the $2,500 stipends, 10 were chosen.

The academic year grants were available to faculty members of all ranks. Of 13 proposals submitted, three were approved for a total of $4,850.

Summer awards provide stipends for recipients who are receiving no other salary during the summer months. Academic year grants cover such research-related expenses as student wages, equipment, supplies and in-state travel.

Money for the awards, which will be disbursed July 1, comes from a state appropriation. Wilhelm says this is "the only block of money earmarked for research that the University receives from the state of Oregon, and it's the only intramural assistance we offer."

Receiving faculty awards for summer were English Prof. John Gage, sociology Prof. Marion Goldman, honors college Prof. Rodney Kilcup, art history Prof. Kathleen Nicholson, history Prof. John Nichols, computer science Gilbert Shaw, economics Prof. Alden Toevs, linguistics Prof. Russell Tomlin, management Prof. Ricardo Ungson, and physical education Prof. Marjorie Woolacott.

Academic year research awards were given to audiologist Ned Christensen, labor educator Steven Deutsch and linguist Thomas Givon.
