Conference examines access

In conjunction with the International Year of Disabled Persons, a two-day conference on solutions to building access problems is scheduled Friday and Saturday at the University.

The conference, which is open to the public, will offer workshops on building access criteria, on accessibility problems of handicapped persons and possible solutions, and design alternatives. The workshops will be conducted by numerous Eugene architects.

Ray Lifchez, architecture professor at the University of California at Berkeley, will be the keynote speaker at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Room 107 of Lawrence Hall. Lifchez is a specialist in architectural design and social factors design, as well as a noted author and speaker on accessibility.

Other conference speakers include Darrel Ackerman, director of the Independent Living Program; Chris Casady, owner of Total Mobility Systems and Design; and John Hall, a social worker at the rehabilitation unit at Sacred Heart General Hospital in Eugene.

In addition to viewing architectural exhibits in Lawrence Hall, participants will take a bus tour to several buildings in Eugene designed for accessibility by handicapped persons.

Cost of the conference is $30, which includes lunch and a wine and cheese reception. An additional $10 will be charged for a spouse. Deadline for registration is noon Wednesday.

For additional information and to register, call George Hodge, University School of Architecture and Allied Arts, 686-3631.

The event is jointly sponsored by International Year of Disabled Persons, Independent Living Program, the Southwestern Oregon Chapter of the American Institute of Architects and the University Department of Architecture.

Grad student honored

Judith Wright-Clarke, a University graduate student in geology, has won top prize for the best student paper from the geology section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Her winning paper, delivered during the recent AAAS Pacific Division meeting in Eugene, offered an interpretation of a trace mineral analysis done on the fossil remains of conodonts. Now extinct, these ancient microscopic marine animals were among the first to construct calcium-based skeletons incorporating trace minerals from ocean water.

The fossil remains of conodonts were discovered in the late 19th century buried in layers of ancient sedimentary rocks.

Her research is expected to increase scientific understanding of the chemistry of the ancient oceans that covered much of North America some 500 million years ago.

Wright-Clarke graduated from California State University at Northridge in 1979 with a bachelor's degree in geology. She is currently working as a research associate with William Holser, a University geologist, while completing her master's degree.
