The Student Health Center, across from Oregon Hall, provides most of the health services students need — for the price of tuition and fees.

Health center offers free care

With a tight academic schedule and a very tight pocketbook, students need an efficient and affordable health care facility close by.

This kind of health care is provided by the many services offered by the Student Health Center, located across from Oregon Hall.

The center is open to all students who have paid tuition and fees and "is able to treat anything that students usually get," according to director James Jackson.

"We generally operate in the place of the family physician," Jackson says, pointing out that the center is well equipped to handle all the primary health needs of University students, from colds and sore throats to allergies and nutrition education.

general practitioners on duty, as well as a large staff of nurses and consulting specialists for the center's different clinics.

"If a student finds a general practitioner he likes, he can request the general practitioner again the next time he needs medical treatment," Jackson says.

Aside from extensive general care, the center offers services geared especially to student health problems, such as an allergy clinic, a women's clinic and a sports medicine clinic.

The center offers several services geared especially to student health problems.

Because the center's infirmary closed last spring, the health center now operates mainly as an outpatient clinic with most of its services free, except charges for lab tests, X-rays, medication and other items, Jackson says.

The center refers students who need hospitalization to one of the two local hospitals or to a student's home-town hospital, he says.

The center has eight full-time severe allergy problems of the Willamette Valley," the allergy clinic has on hand consulting allergists to help treat any asthmatic or allergic problem, Jackson says.

"It is a significant program," he says. "About 10 percent of the students here encounter some allergic problem or another."

Jackson suggests that students wishing to head off gram airs daily at 5:00 p.m.

KWAX presents its own local news feature — "In Other Words" — Tuesday at 7:30 p.m. In addition, KWAX presents "Women's Voice," a local show focusing on women's issues Monday at 8:00 p.m.

On Saturday nights, KWAX airs the popular drama series "Star Wars" and "Hitchhikers"

Guide to the Galaxy," as well as "Prairie Home Companion," a live variety show featuring jazz and folk music.

KWAX is looking for volunteers to assist the station's staff, Kenney says. People are needed for clerical, on-the-air and reporting work. Interested persons should go to the KWAX offices on the third floor of Villard Hall.
