Tuesday event set for older students

An informational program for adults who have questions about taking courses at the University will happen Tuesday. Dubbed the "Older Than Average Students Information Faire," the program will take place from 5:30 p.m. to 7:30 p.m. in the Gerlinger Hall Alumni Lounge at East 15th and University. It is free and open to all students and community members.

Student coordinator Claire O'Connell says the event "is designed for adult learners who do not have the time to participate in the regular student orientation week because they work or have families."

Regular orientation events are spread over several days, but the fair will consolidate the information in one place at one time.

"The fair is also designed for those people who just want to see if school is possible for them," she says. "So many people postpone going back to school because they think they can't fit it all in, and this fair may help them decide that they can."

The fair will be divided into four cluster areas — academic, campus and community services, jobs and careers, and social activities and groups. Representatives from major University and community support services will attend and adult students will provide informational peer counseling.

Further information about the fair is available from its sponsor, the Lifelong Learning Services Program, at 686-3211.

Accounting course begins next week

A certified public accountant review course will begin at the University's business college next week.

The program, which includes a concentrated review of accounting practice and theory, auditing and business law, is specifically designed to prepare participants for the state CPA examination, says course coordinator Robert Bowman, head of the accounting department.

"Registrants should have a solid background in accounting, derived through formal or independent study," Bowman says.

Class sessions will be held weekday evenings beginning Monday and during the day on weekends through Oct. 25. All sessions will be held in Room 336 Gilbert Hall. Enrollment is limited.

Fees for the course are $240 for the accounting practice and theory session, $95 for the auditing session and $75 for the business law session. The package session price is $375.

For registration and information, call the business college at 686-3370.

was removed from the salad bar.

With the salad-by-the-ounce pricing, the food service can be "more specific with the pricing" and stock even the wildly fluctuating items, she says.

McMillan says she foresees no changes in the main cafeteria. They will, she says, continue the Mexican food line, which has proven to be extremely popular.

The EMU food service has had only a few complaints regarding the quality of its food, says McMillan, who believes this is because EMU food is more like restaurant food than institutional food.

"We are always concerned about the quality and variety of the food and meeting the likes and dislikes of students."
