Volunteers connect callers with services

Ever find yourself in the sticky situation of needing information just to find information?

Relax and call Switchboard, an information and referral service offered by Lane County.

"If we can find information, we do it. If not, we'll try to find someone who can," says Scott Slovic, one of 25 Switchboard volunteers.

People call Switchboard for just about everything, Slovic says. He handles calls on where to find the nearest health-food store and calms callers facing a potential crisis.

In addition, Switchboard acts as a "charity service," providing information on where to find food and shelter, Slovic says.

"We often refer people to the Eugene Mission or other religious organizations," he says.

Funded primarily through grants and donations, Switchboard gets some of its funds from federal revenue sharing, says Volunteer Coordinator Marie Fink.

Additional money comes from sales of a human resources file, available to groups and individuals, Fink says.

The ASUO gave Switchboard $2,600 during the 1981-82 school year. Most of that money will pay for telephones, according to ASUO records. Students are some of the biggest users of Switchboard's services.

Volunteers for Switchboard are trained once a week for three weeks, Slovic says.

"A lot of people who can't find work come to Switchboard because it's good experience and they can get references."

Those interested in more information can reach Switchboard at 686-8453.

Carpool information for rides in or out-of-state is available from Ride Share at 345-7600. The service is free to University students.

No need to worry about food stamps

Students who are worried about whether or not Pres. Ronald Reagan's budget cuts will affect their eligibility for food stamps can breathe easy — for the time being.

"We've received (word of) nothing that actually affects students," says Julie Singer, supervisor at the Eugene branch of the food stamp office.

Students are eligible for food stamps if they work 20 hours a week, or if they have a work-study job, Singer says. Heads of households with dependents and disabled individuals also are eligible, she says.

An appointment is necessary when applying for food stamps, Singer says, as well as verification of financial aid, such as a letter from an employer. Applicants also should bring rent and utility receipts and identification.

Single adults or families without children who live in Eugene can apply for food stamps at the Eugene branch, located at 165 E. 7th. The phone number is 686-7717.

Families with children should call 686-7722 or stop by 1790 W. 11th Ave.

Springfield residents can contact the Springfield branch at 221 N. B St. or call 726-3511.
