Packwood wants feds out of DMSO regulation

DMSO, the controversial wonder drug developed by a University doctor, soon will be regulated by the state if Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., has his way.

"I feel very strongly that responsibility for the use of DMSO be removed from the cumbersome federal process, as Oregonians have indicated they want," Packwood says.

The Food and Drug Administration is currently in charge of regulating and distributing DMSO in Oregon.

Dr. Stanley Jacob, associate professor of surgery at the University's Health Science Center in Portland, has performed tests with DMSO since the early 1960s. He has found the drug effective for relieving pain caused by arm and leg injuries, arthritis and burns.

DMSO also aids in the treatment of eye disease, spinal cord injuries, and even cancer, he says.

Despite Jacob's research, the FDA has remained cautious about the use of the drug. Not until 1978 did the FDA authorize physicians to dispense DMSO — and only for a rare bladder disease known as intestinal cystitis.

But now, because of peculiarities in prescription laws, doctors are free to prescribe the drug for any disorder that they believe warrants the use of DMSO. Chuck Williams, a representative for Dr. Jacob, says that physicians "have a very wide latitude" in prescribing the drug.

If Packwood's bill passes, a committee made up of mostly pharmacists and physicians will prepare regulations and monitor the distribution of DMSO throughout the state, bypassing the federal regulation process, Williams says.

FDA representatives continue to insist that their reason for strict regulation of DMSO is not to dispute Jacob's research. Industrial-strength DMSO (used as a degreaser and paint thinner) has been readily available on the black market and in Oregon stores since the CBS news program "60 Minutes" placed Dr. Jacob and the "wonder drug" in the national spotlight.

"We're concerned that it can be a carrier of chemical impurities to the body," an FDA official says.

Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Forest Grove, introduced legislation identical to Packwood's Senate bill in the House of Representatives on Sept. 24.

Scargenti's offers novice a true taste of native Italy

Cooking class leads connoisseurs of Italian food through maze of recipes and cooking techniques

Italian food connoisseurs can learn to cook the real stuff from a native Italian.

Scargenti's, a Eugene bakery and delicatessen, is offering a series of weekly Italian cooking classes, beginning Oct. 13.

Don Scarpelli, co-owner and manager of Scargenti's, says customers often ask about Italian recipes and cooking techniques, but because "we're a bit busy with the daily routines of the deli and bakery, it made teaching of the classes difficult for us to schedule."

Luckily, a friend, Guy Di Torrice, offered to teach the classes, which will be held in the kitchen of Scargenti's at 192 W. 11th Ave.

"We'll start with some basic pasta and sauce recipes and work our way up to some pasta dishes and dinners," Di Torrice says.

Most of the recipes will come from his parents, both of whom were born in Italy, but Di Torrice says he will include his own favorites that friends and other relatives have shared with him.

The classes will emphasize cooking instruction and hands-on experimentation.

Registration, which is on a first come, first served basis, will be limited to nine students per class and will be taken until Oct. 12. The class cost is $45 plus ingredient purchases, and will be offered for three weeks on either Tuesday or Wednesday evenings from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m.
