

Board decree ignored

EMU groups won't move

Student organizations are not cooperating with orders by the EMU to move their offices, says board chairer Bob Needham. Furthermore, they are apathetic to EMU board functions and decisions, Needham says.

When the EMU board voted earlier this month to rearrange offices within the building, they set a compliance deadline for 11 days ago. Needham now says the moves and building alterations, affecting 17 organizations, probably will be resolved by the end of this week.

He adds that response to the board's actions by student organizations who are housed in the EMU is lacking and that personal recruitment will be necessary to fill four empty student seats on the board.

Any program or organization could benefit from having a member on the board, he says.

Questionnaires mailed to about 20 organizations who might be affected by the office rearrangement received poor response, Needham says.

After receiving only about 12 responses he says that many groups didn't check their mailboxes, ignored messages, and "gave me a hard time."

"People don't want to be disturbed," he says. Major changes include moving the Food-Op from Suite 5 to Suite 1, SEARCH from Suite 1 to Room 111, the Incidental Fee Committee from Suite 4 to Suite 3 University Veterans from Suite 3 to Suite 1, and the Muslim Student Association from Room 111 to Room 149.

Two groups new to the EMU — Residence Hall Governance Council and Women in Communications — probably will get space in Suite 4 and Room 149, respectively.

The space allocation policy, adopted by the board at its Oct. 1 meeting, establishes a written proposal as criteria for the allocation of office space within the EMU.

"I wish people would get involved in the early stages," Needham says, adding that there would be fewer complaints when a policy is adopted.

Needham says that due to recent typewriter thefts, EMU security will become the board's next priority when it meets in late October or early November.

Films examine effects of birth

A series of films on childbirth will be shown tonight from 7 to 9:30 p.m. in Room 150 Geology.

The series, entitled "Birth of a Family," is being sponsored by Birthways, a part of the Lane County Childbirth Resource Center, Inc.

The films are of value to men as well as women, and not only expectant parents, Birthways director Linda Ware says.

The films in this year's series are more hospital-oriented than those in last year's festival, Ware says.

The five films scheduled to show are:

"Emotional Aspects of Pregnancy," which deals with the emotional changes experienced by women and men during pregnancy and birth.

"Five women, Five Births," which examines five different childbirth situations in a hospital, birth center, and home.

"Gentle Birth," which focuses on the Le Boyer technique.

"Fathering," which looks at the emotional responses to becoming a father.

"The Caesarean Birth Experience," which takes a positive look at Caesarean births.

Birthways is an educational, counselling and referral service.

The film festival is co-sponsored by the Women's Referral and Resource Service. Admission is $2.75 at the door and proceeds will go to Birthways.

Blacks absorb deficit

The Incidental Fee Committee accepted on Monday the Black Student Union's offer to reduce its 1981-82 budget by $1,500 to eliminate more than half of its 1980-81 deficit.

The BSU absorbed the entire loss from last year's Multi-Cultural Night, an event cosponsored by several ethnic student unions, according to ASUO budget director Allan Contreras.

In other business, the committee allocated $472 for John Moore, ASUO executive coordinator, to attend a Nov. 16-18 session on fundraising at San Francisco's Fundraising School.

A request by the Coalition Opposing Registration and the Draft was not on the agenda because ASUO Executive budget "Draft Services" funds have been granted instead of IFC funding.
