Stockman offers Reagan resignation

WASHINGTON

David Stockman, architect of Pres. Reagan's budget-cutting crusade, offered his resignation Thursday for saying that Reaganomics might not work, but said the president "asked me to stay on the team."

Stockman told a news conference Thursday afternoon that he offered his resignation to Reagan "because my poor judgment and loose talk did him and his program a serious disservice."

He spent 45 minutes conferring with Reagan amid the political uproar over his published acknowledgement of skepticism about the administration budget and tax cut program in the December issue of Atlantic Monthly.

"At the end of the meeting, the president asked me to stay on the team," Stockman said.

The director of the Office of Management and Budget was quoted in the Atlantic Monthly article as saying that Reagan's economic plan was essentially an updated term for the old philosophy of giving tax breaks to the wealthy in hopes the benefits would "trickle down" to the rest of society.

He also was quoted as saying that Reagan could not balance the budget, criticizing the final version of the tax cut passed by Congress and saying of the program's optimistic economic projections "None of us really understands what's going on with all these numbers."

Reaction from Congress was split along party lines.

Congressional Democrats said Thursday that Stockman has so damaged his credibility that he might as well have resigned.

But Republicans, while admitting Stockman may have some short-term credibility problems, generally supported Reagan's decision to keep his embattled budget director on the job.

Columbia mission may be shortened

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla.

Columbia's crew, after taking the shuttle on a brilliant return to space Thursday, was told that their five-day mission was likely to be cut — perhaps in half. The astronauts were not in danger and NASA laid plans for a landing as early as Saturday.

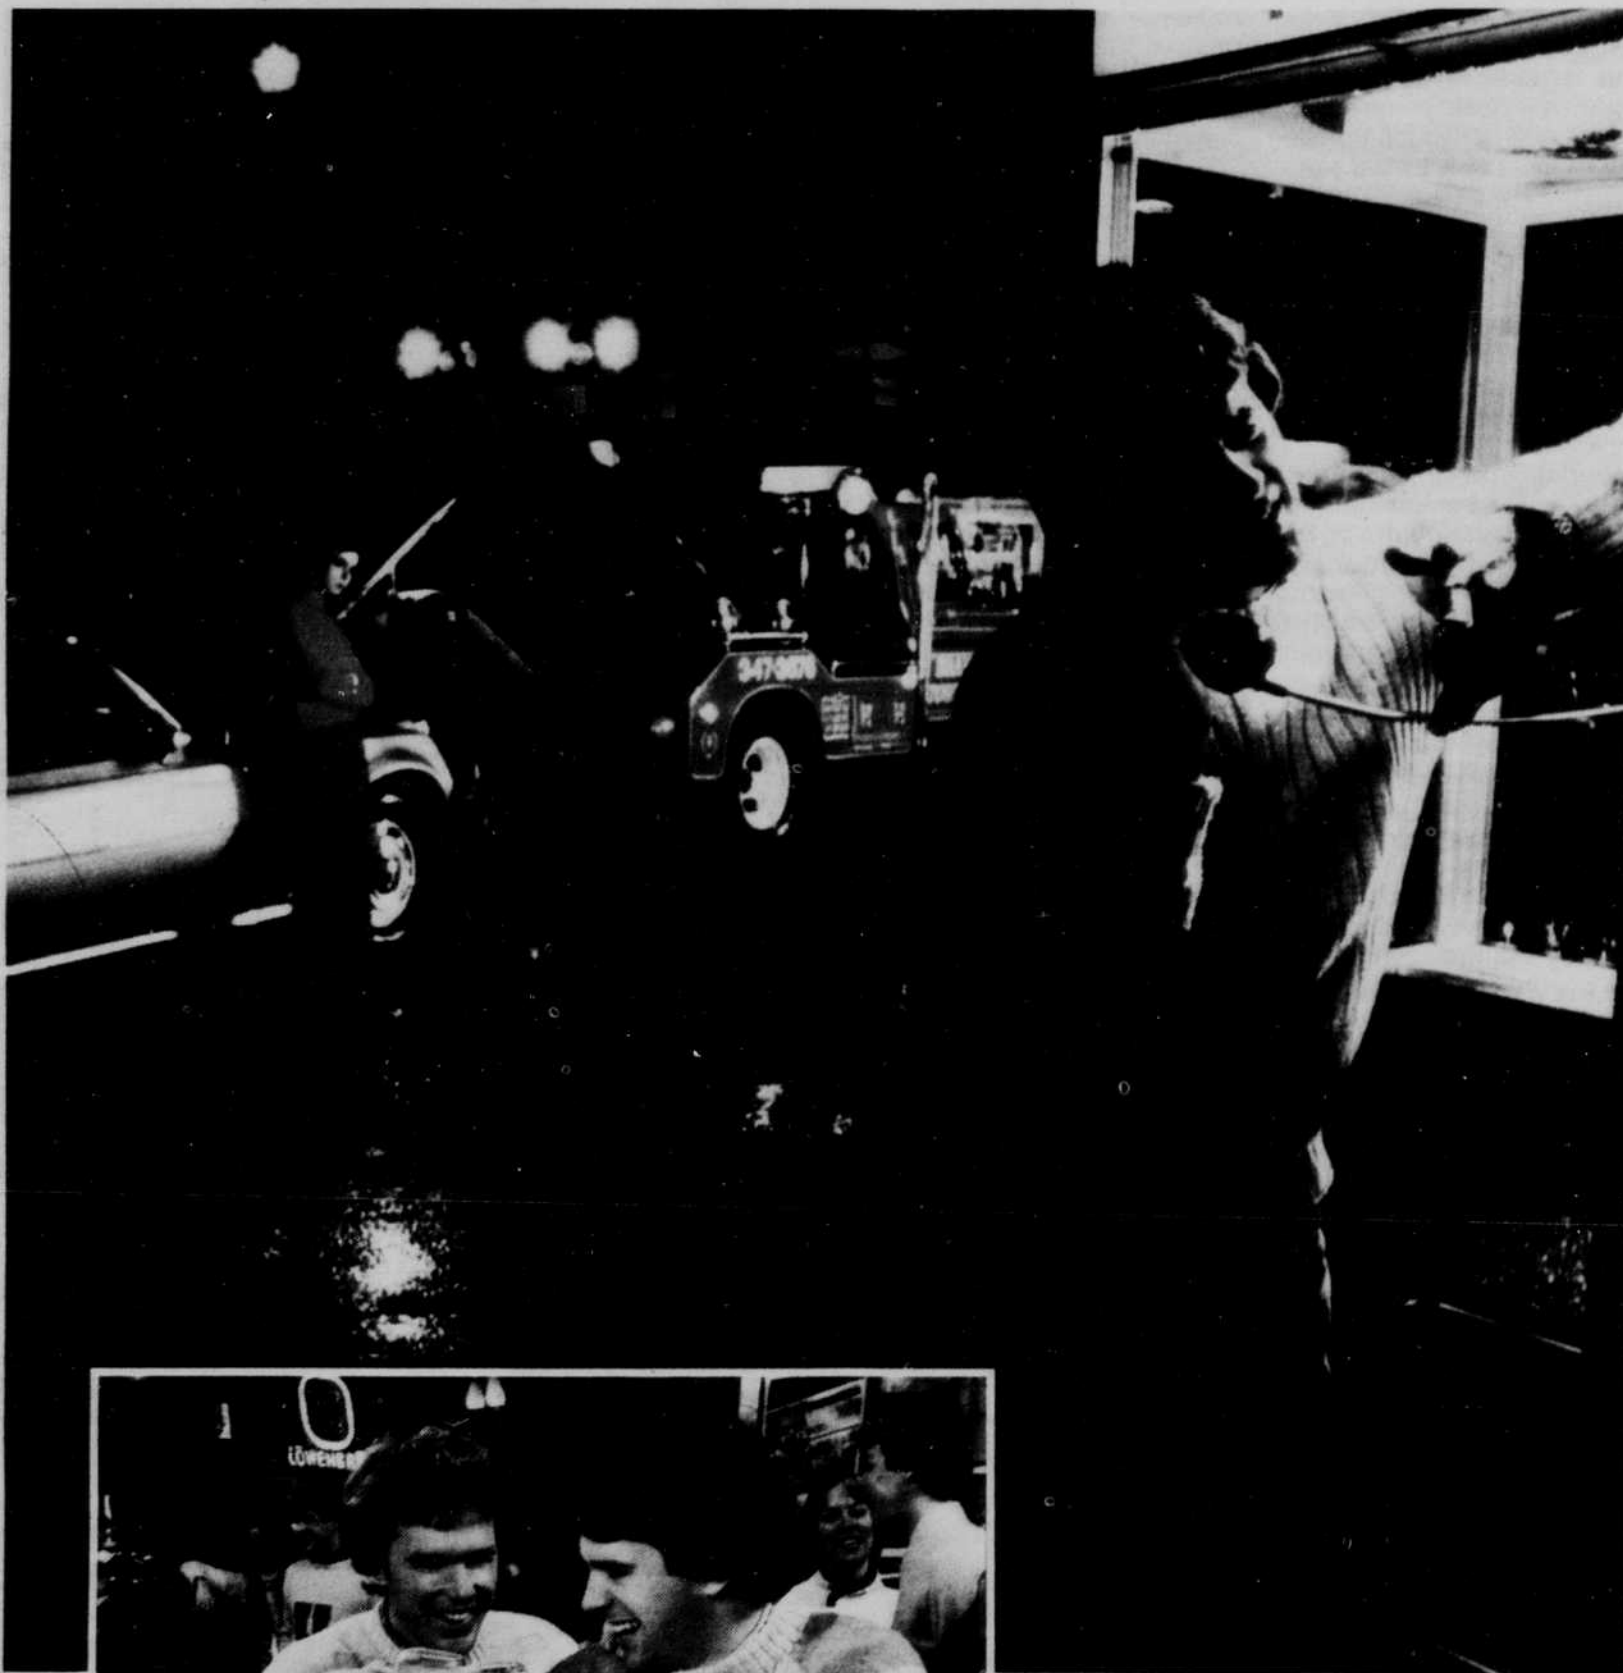

A space agency spokesman explained the mission could continue beyond Saturday "if things were looking well, a day at a time." The problem was with an electricity-producing fuel cell, but two others worked fine.

In the meantime, Joe Engle and Richard Truly were expected to cram as much of their flight exercises as possible into Friday's schedule.

The fuel cell problem caused NASA to announce that it was invoking rules calling for a minimum flight of 54 hours. That word came less than seven hours after Columbia's 10:10 a.m. EST liftoff.

Several hours later, NASA's John McLeish in Houston said that did not mean that the shuttle would have to come down after 54 hours — only that the critical items would be pushed into that time frame.

When you need $65 fast, you find out who your friends are.

It's the middle of the night and everyone has an excuse. Then, finally, you get the one person who, even though he's not very happy about it, will come through. And you think, "I knew it. Why didn't I just call him in the first place?"

So when the crisis is over, he's going to deserve something a little special. Tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.
