The Annual Giving Program

Every year thousands of alumni and friends make gifts to the University through the UO Foundation's Annual Fund. The gifts are processed and passed along to the colleges, departments, faculty and students, or invested as part of the endowment fund.

These annual gifts are triggered by a sophisticated program of direct mail, student operated telephone campaigns, and in-person visits. Incidentally, more than 90% of all the annual gifts are restricted to a specific University purpose by the donor.

Want to know more about the annual fund? Call Doug Wilson, Executive Director, at your Foundation,

Law library

A recent Emerald article suggested that the Law Library might be a good place to study for finals. It isn't, as this poor non-law student found out. Law students are rather protective of their study area, and frown on trespassers.

3 places not to study

Fall-asleep lounge

One of the main objectives of the student cramming for finals is to stay awake as much as possible. This is virtually impossible in the lounge on the main floor of the EMU, a nice, quiet, warm place with (yawn) comfy, soft couches and zzzzzzzzz.

EMU freeway

While it's not good to be in too quiet a place, it's wise to avoid Grand Central Station study areas. This area is bad for two reasons: its constant flow of people and its proximity to all sorts of sweets.
