CUTTER'S WAY
 A dazzling screenplay, three superb performance (John Heard, the brilliantly verbose Vietnam war amputee, Lisa Eichorn, his alcoholic wife, and California golden boy-gigolo Jeff Bridges who witness a wealthy industrialist's panicky sex crime) create easily the best directed Hollywood movie of the year. "It percolates with odd rhythms, original scenes and comic details." Village Voice.

AMERICAN GIGOLO
 You can look at this movie two ways. For the sensualists among us, what could be more aesthetically pleasing than the sight of Richard Gere and Lauren Hutton, who wear Giorgio Armani or nothing at all? But if you demand more from a movie than the buzz you get from reading Gentleman's Quarterly, consider that director Paul Schrader (screenwriter of Taxi Drive, director of Hardcore) fills Gigolo with a Calvinist's ambivalence toward decadence and corruption. Gere is a hooker with a heart of gold, at least in comparison with his Beverly Hills' clientele who conspire to frame him for murder. The cherry on top? Debbie Harry singing "Call Me." Check it out.

HEAVEN'S GATE
 directed by Michael (The Deerhunter) Cimino
 What do you say about a $40 million dollar movie that died? That it was beautiful, breathtaking, and vastly underrated? Cimino, like many a great director before him, has seized upon the Western as an allegory for American life, but John Wayne is dead and gone, and Cimino Western is a testament to the greed, venality, and violence of the American Way. Heaven's Gate is an epic, and if its flaws are outside - a rambling, occasionally confused plot - its graces - bracing cinematography and re-creation of late 19th century America that catches in your throat - are of even greater stature. Sure, the critics pounced, but as Kris Kristofferson says, "The critics drink their own bath water." Find out what you missed.

Providence
 A famous novelist suffering from a fatal illness, passes a terrible night hallucinating about various members of his family: his dead wife, his son and daughter-in-law, and his illegitimate son. He believes that each of them hates him, and each other, and as he drinks to ease his pain he twists this hatred into material for a new novel. Directed by Alan Resnais, (Last Year at Marienbad, Hiroshima Mon Amour) Providence is a complex and shifting story within a story.
