

Reagan to transfer programs

WASHINGTON — Pres. Ronald Reagan plans a program of close to $50 billion a year that would give the federal system its most radical shake-up since the Great Depression expanded the social programs of the government in Washington.

Details were provided Tuesday by sources familiar with the plans. The sources asked not to be named.

Beginning with his State of the Union speech on Tuesday evening, the president will move toward a transfer of virtually all non-defense domestic programs to state and local governments.

The first step would be a program swap, with the federal government assuming full costs of Medicaid health care for the poor, at a cost of $19.1 billion a year. In return, the states would take over welfare and food stamp programs, costing $16.5 billion a year.

The second phase, beginning in the fiscal 1984 and running through fiscal 1987, would transfer about 40 federally assisted programs to state and local governments. These programs currently cost Washington about $30.2 billion a year.

To help the states assume these new responsibilities, Reagan will propose a Federalism Trust Fund of about $28 billion to be created from existing federal excise taxes and the windfall profits tax on petroleum.

States taking over the programs could draw on the fund to pay for them during the first half of an eight-year transition period.

However, a state could opt not to take on the programs during these first four years. In that case, a federal agency would operate them for the state, but would pay for them with money drawn from that state's share of the trust fund.

After four years, the federal government would begin to run out and state and local governments would face hard decisions on financing the programs on their own or letting them die.

Starting in 1988, the trust fund would be phased out by 25 percent each year. After 1991, there would be no federal money left to help pay the 40 programs by then fully in the laps of states.

At the same time, the federal government would stop collecting excise taxes, except for 2 cents per gallon on gasoline which would be used to maintain the interstate highway system.
