ALPHAVILLE

Jean-Luc Godard became famous in 1959 for his first feature film Breathless. His style has always been bizarre and in 1965 he made his only science-fiction film to date: Alphaville. Over it's more about the horrors of today, than those of tomorrow. One of Godard's most disciplined and rewarding films about the all-too-familiar alienation in a technological society.

ELEPHANT MAN

Set in Victorian England, "The Elephant Man" is testimony to both man's ignominy and his nobility. John Merrick, the "elephant man" of the title, was born grossly deformed; subject to ridicule and revulsion, he's forced to make his living as a side show attraction until he is rescued by a sympathetic doctor. At last given a small measure of respect, Merrick becomes a source of inspiration to the Londoners who formerly abused him. Oscar nominations included Best Picture, Best Director - David ("Eraserhead") Lynch, and Best Actor - John Hurt as the Elephant Man.

ATLANTIC CITY

"Atlantic City" is a romantic thriller set in the East Coast resort city whose declining fortunes have been dramatically reversed with the introduction of legalized gambling casinos. The film is populated with characters hoping to get a new lease on life, much like the city itself. Burt Lancaster stars as Lou, a small-time hood and numbers runner; Susan Sarandon is Sally, who studies blackjack dealing and dreams of Monte Carlo. In the hands of director Louis Malle ("Murmur of the Heart," "Pretty Baby"), the couple and the city itself become entwined in a surreal romance.
