

SUAB disapproves IFC's new selection

The Student University Affairs Board Wednesday rejected an appointment to the Incidental Fee Committee and approved a proposal redefining Dead Week requirements.

In a 4-1 vote, with three abstentions, SUAB reversed an earlier voice vote approval of Robert Payne. Saying the previous vote was "premature," chairer Gale Graham steered the group into what he called an "executive session," during which board members raised numerous questions about Payne.

Under Oregon Revised Statutes 192.660, executive sessions may not be called for the discussion of "The filling of a vacancy in an elective office."

Payne, an administrative assistant to the IFC, said in a question-and-answer session previous to the "executive session" that he is not prejudiced against any ASUO-funded organization and that he would not be intimidated by other IFC members.

"My views are working with everyone else personally," he said. The rejection of Payne was apparently based on members' doubts of Payne's ability to not be easily persuaded and remain objective in funding student organizations — views expressed during the so-called executive session.

SUAB members also said they preferred more time to investigate Payne, with one board member expressing surprise Payne could not tell SUAB his ideas on ASUO organizations despite his work for the IFC for more than two months.

But Graham said ASUO needed a decision immediately because IFC budget hearings begin Monday.

ASUO Pres. Rich Wilkins, who appointed Payne, said he was a "little surprised" by the decision and that Payne's name would be resubmitted at SUAB's Friday meeting. IFC chairer Karsten Rasmussen had no immediate comment about the decision.

Payne was appointed to the IFC position left vacant by Pam Jordan's Monday resignation.

Commissioners nix development

Lane County commissioners voted 3-2 Wednesday to reject a land-use change necessary for construction of a $55-million housing and recreational development on the McKenzie River east of Eugene.

The Weyerhaeuser Real Estate Co. had proposed building 600 family and retirement homes, 200 vacation units, a lodge and a retail center on 260 acres near the town of Leaburg.

The commissioners' decision came on a Weyerhaeuser application for an exception to a statewide planning goal requiring protection of forest land.

Wednesday's vote reaffirmed a tentative decision made by the commissioners last month. Weyerhaeuser says it has spent more than $100,000 seeking the land-use exception.

Career seminar to be held Feb. 3

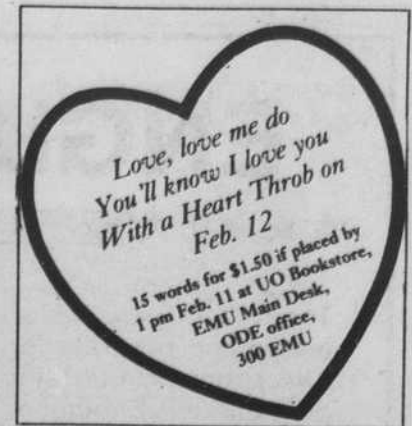

Students and the general public will have an opportunity to meet with representatives from varied fields at the University's sixth annual Career Exploration Fair on Wednesday, Feb. 3.

The morning session will consist of eight panel discussions held in the EMU Ballroom. The first four panels, which will meet from 10-11 a.m., will focus on marketing, media and arts, transportation, hotel and food occupations and general service careers. The second group of panels, which will meet from 11 a.m. to noon, will deal with finance, science and research, management and personnel and education.

From noon to 3 p.m., participants will be able to talk informally with approximately 70 professionals, with a chance to ask them about their jobs and employers.

"We've made a special effort to include representatives from career areas which have greater than average employment prospects for college graduates of the 1980s," says Debbie Chereck, career development specialist with the University's Career Planning and Placement Service and the fair's coordinator.

"In fact, nearly one-half of the career fields represented fall into this category," she says. These include energy research and development, marketing, computer technology, law, architecture, public relations and hospital administration.

Now open Sundays and evenings.
