Ducks need a sweep

High finish on the line against Cardinals, Cal

By Donald Coulter
Of the Emerald

To say that this will be a "must" weekend for the Oregon men's basketball team may be an exaggeration, but a pair of victories over Stanford and California could be just the medicine the Ducks need at this stage of the season.

"If we're going to finish in the upper division (of the Pac-10) we need to win this weekend," Oregon coach Jim Haney says of the two Mac Court contests.

"Any home game is vital. These are two teams we can beat."

And they are two teams the Ducks would surely love to beat, after losing to both on the road four weeks ago. The Ducks dropped a 91-81 decision to Cal in Berkeley, before losing the next evening at Stanford, 97-88.

"We ran into an unfortunate situation down there," Oregon forward John Greig says of the Ducks' trip to the Bay Area. "We got caught up in the officiating problems we had against Cal, and then when things went wrong at Stanford, we started thinking about what happened the night before."

"We got frustrated when we didn't get the call we wanted and we lost our composure."

Oregon (3-6 in the conference, 8-10 overall) was without the services of starting guard Fred Cofield for both those games, a factor that has not escaped California coach Duck Kutchen.

"Oregon had to play without Cofield, whom I consider one of the best guards in the Pac-10 when healthy," Kutchen says. "And it was a road game for them. So reverse the home court advantage, and figure on a healthy Cofield and draw your own conclusions."

The Bears were led by Mark McNamara's 27 points in that game. McNamara leads the Pac-10 in scoring (22.4), rebounding (13.3) and is the NCAA's field goal percentage leader (16.92). Another key in that win was the play of Cal's 5-9 guard Michael Chavez, who ripped the Ducks for 21 points, his season high. Chavez is averaging 9.9 points a game.

"McNamara is going to get his, but we have to keep the others in line," says Greig. "Michael Chavez is not a person who should be scoring that much."

Tonight's opponent, Stanford, is paced by sophomore center John Revelli. Revelli is among the conference leaders in scoring (16.9).

Jerome Williams and the Ducks hope to avenge losses to Cal and Stanford with victories this weekend.

rebounding (9.4) and field goal percentage (.640). But it was another surprise — reserve forward Orlando Ward — who burned the Ducks at Stanford. Ward came off the bench to score 16 against the Ducks in that game.

The victory against Oregon has been the only conference win for Stanford (1-8, 6-12), which comes into the contest with a seven-game losing streak. Cal (3-6, 9-9) has lost six of its last seven since the Oregon win, the lone victory coming over Arizona last Saturday.

DUCK NOTES — STARTING TIME FOR BOTH TONIGHT'S GAME VS. Stanford and Saturday's game against California is 7:30 p.m. Greig is the Ducks leading scorer with 15.8 points, while Jerome Williams is second with 13.6. The two forwards also one-two in team rebounding stats: Williams is averaging 8.1 and Greig 7.4.
