

Bomb threat proves false

While students were in the middle of midterm exams on Monday afternoon, an unidentified man called the intramural sports office and said he had planted a "small bomb in the women's locker room by the pool," said Marlene Olson, a work-study student who answered the call.

Campus Security officers evacuated Gerlinger Hall at about 12:15 p.m., said Dennis Kelley, a security officer.

The caller said that a bomb would be detonated at 12:55 p.m. Campus security officers said no bomb was located and people were allowed to re-enter the building at 1:15 p.m.

The caller was irrational and apparently blamed the intramural program for "spats with his girlfriend," Kelley said.

"He said we had taken his girlfriend away from him with sports," Olson said.

While Olson kept the caller on the line, other staff members in the intramural office contacted Pacific Northwest Bell to have the call traced, but their efforts were unsuccessful.

"Ma Bell tried to trace it, they found the line and said no one was on it," Olson said.

"We talked for about 20 minutes while we tried to trace the call," Olson said. "It was basically an obscene phone call... he was pretending he was my father - I guess I was his daughter."

"We don't have the slightest idea who it is, he was real vague, he was really depressed," Olson said.

Olum, faculty talk about cuts

University Pres. Paul Olum has called an emergency meeting of the University Assembly on Wednesday to discuss a possible new round of budget cuts.

The 3:30 p.m. meeting will be in 150 Geology. Classified and management staff representatives have also been invited to attend.

"The discussion will center around the chancellor's recent instructions to us to prepare a new list of possible program reductions or eliminations for the 1982-83 budget year," Olum said.

Chancellor Roy Lieuallen asked the presidents of the eight colleges and universities in the state system of higher education to submit their proposals to him by Feb. 28. The chancellor had been instructed by the Oregon Legislature to look at program cuts as a possible way to abolish the $49 per term tuition surcharge imposed at the start of winter term.

Olum said last Thursday that a list from the chancellor's staff does not represent the program reductions the University would propose.

Among the 10 schools and departments listed were the law school and the school of community service and public affairs.

Program joins prize finalists

The Resident Teacher Master's Degree Program in the College of Education is one of three finalists for the Distinguished Program in Teacher Education Award from the Association of Teacher Educators.

The other finalists are the University of Texas and Fordham University. Announcement of the award is expected to be made Feb. 17 at the ATE annual meeting in Phoenix, Ariz.

The University program, one of 24 in the country, combines work toward a master's degree with a year of full-time teaching in a public school. The program's goal is to help young teachers who have a basic teaching certificate reach master's teacher status.

The program currently has 25 students, with 16 teaching in the Eugene 4-J School District, five in the Springfield School District, two in the Crow-Applegate-Lorane School District and one each in Junction City and Fern Ridge School Districts.

The entry in the ATE competition uses the Eugene 4-J program as the model.

Other school districts which have participated in the program during the past five years include Coos Bay, Gresham, Hillsboro, Redmond, Roseburg and South Umpqua, according to Virginia Schwartzrock, clinical professor for the program.

She said the program is unique because the cooperative arrangement between the University and the school district can be tailored to meet the needs of both urban and rural schools.

For example, the supervisors, chosen from among the top teachers and curriculum specialists in the district, can supervise several teachers in one school or several teachers at different schools.

"There is considerable competition for spots in this program, and currently we have students from six states," Schwartzrock said. She noted that studies of the program have shown that a high percentage of its graduates remain in teaching as a career and many move into leadership roles in their schools.

The program is an outgrowth of one started in the 1960s with grants from the Ford Foundation.
