SUAB alters dead week plan

Clarifying a similar dead week proposal approved two weeks ago, the Student University Affairs Board approved an alternative proposal Wednesday.

The new proposal specifies that no examinations worth more than 20 percent of the final grade and no final exams shall be given during dead week. Only projects assigned on the class syllabus within the first two weeks of the term can be due during the week before finals, reads the proposal.

The previous proposal was too vague and "needed more flesh," said SUAB member Jeff Nichols. The earlier proposal said no examinations or new projects could be assigned on the week prior to final examinations.

The prior proposal was intended to be "chewed up" and used to gauge Faculty Senate reaction, said SUAB chair Gale Graham. The alternative proposal will be substituted at the Feb. 24 meeting of the Senate, he said.

"This (new proposal) gives us a good idea of what we're going to do," Graham said.

In other business, the board approved the addition of two new SUAB members. Vicki Wooster, a senior majoring in English, and Erika Wagner, a junior health major, were unanimously approved in a voice vote.

Enter Cupid

A mischievous, winged child, armed with darts or a quiver of arrows. His business? The piercing of hearts. Such is Cupid, god of love, and a favorite symbol of Valentines.

Long before there was a Valentine's Day, Cupid played a central role in the ancient Greek and Roman celebrations dedicated to love and lovers. Named Eros by the Greeks, the young god was the son and companion of Aphrodite, goddess of love and beauty. Among the Romans the same deity was known as Venus, and her son as Cupid, the name familiar to us today.

By either name, Cupid was a symbol of passionate, tender, or playful love. His arrows were invisible, his targets the hearts of mortals or gods alike. The victim would become aware of having been shot by falling hopelessly, and helplessly, in love.
