IFC discovers extra $5,000

The Incidental Fee Committee discovered an extra $5,000 over the ASUO estimation Thursday, said Alan Contreras, acting ASUO vice president for program administration. The extra funds will be paid to the State Board of Higher Education to cover their costs of handling the ASUO payroll, Contreras said.

Including Thursday's hearings, the IFC has approved nearly $300 less than ASUO recommendations for organizations funded by incidental fees.

The IFC cut an additional $200 from the Model United Nations budget, on top of the 36 percent cut from the group's request. The MUN budget for 1982-83 is now slightly more than $1,150. The additional cut was made in order to comply with established IFC policy, committee member David Gibson said.

MUN requested money for food and lodging at the annual Far West conference to be held at Arizona State University in 1983. The IFC declined to fund the items because of its policy prohibiting funding for food on trips outside the region. Most committee members oppose lodging funding, Gibson said.

Trips taken outside states adjoining Oregon are becoming increasingly popular with groups, thus necessitating a consistent IFC policy, he added.

"We have to take the bull by the horns right now instead of waiting for the tail," Gibson said.

The Gay People's Alliance was cut by nearly $90 over this year's level as the IFC rejected a $450 administrative assistant position but increased speaker and telephone expenses. The GPA 1982-83 budget is almost $2,000.

Despite an ASUO recommendation for no funding, the IFC voted 6-0 to appropriate $60 to the Cuba Study Group.

The Committee for Musical Arts received a $100 increase by a 7-0 vote, giving it almost $7,200 for next year.

In other action, the IFC budgeted more than $2,400 for the Food-Op, less than $3,000 for the Interfraternity Council and more than $4,000 for the Action Now tool library.

Handicapped panel slated

The 17th annual Oregon Conference, a three-day series of panels and workshops for people working with handicapped children and adults, opens Thursday at the University.

The conference is designed to bring together parents and professionals from all fields and to share information concerning the handicapped, says Nonda Stone, conference coordinator. About 700 individuals from throughout the Northwest attended last year's sessions.

A variety of all-day workshops will highlight the conference's first day. Sexuality education for the developmentally disabled, communication skills for improving interpersonal relations and Oregon high school model programs for severely handicapped students are some of the special offerings.

Also on Thursday, an Oregon legislative update on programs for the handicapped will be coordinated by James Toews of the Association for Retarded Citizens-Oregon at 7:30 p.m. in the EMU.

The keynote presentation, "Services for Mentally Retarded and Other Developmentally Disabled Oregonians: Today and Tomorrow," is scheduled for the first general session at 8:45 a.m. Friday in the Erb Memorial Union.

The rest of the conference offers participants their choice of more than five dozen workshops and presentations, each lasting 90 minutes. These sessions run from 10:15 a.m. to 5 p.m. Friday and continue from 8:30 a.m. to 3:15 p.m. Saturday.

The preregistration fee, if paid before Monday, is $10. Registration at the conference is $12.50. Full-time students will be charged $3.50. Participants may receive one hour of University credit for the conference at extra cost.

For further information, contact Nonda Stone at the College of Education, University of Oregon, Eugene, OR 97403, or call 686-3530.

Demand leaps for graduates

Despite a nationwide slump in economic activity, most company executives say their hiring needs for 1982 college graduates are up, according to a survey conducted by a national non-profit organization.

The Endicott Report, published by Northwestern University, found the greatest leap in demand is for chemistry graduates, up 30 percent, and engineering graduates, up 21 percent.

The report also shows strong demand for graduates in accounting, business administration, computer science, sales and marketing.

Even in industries hurt by high interest rates and weak profits, business representatives made generally optimistic estimates of future business conditions.

Only 18 percent of the companies in the survey expect 1982 to be "not as good as 1981," while 82 percent expect business to equal or better 1982's performance.

Salaries for 1982 graduates underscore the hiring demand in certain areas. Engineering graduates, front-runners on the salary scale, will earn an average $25,500 in 1982, or 11.4 percent more than last year. Salaries for computer science graduates are not far behind, at $22,260.

Chemistry and mathematics-statistics graduates should receive offers averaging about $21,500, and the report shows salaries for business, economics and accounting graduates should be in the range of $17,500 to $18,500.

Liberal arts graduates are still down the scale, at $16,000 for 1982, but an 8.3 percent gain in pay indicates strong hiring trends, according to the report.
