

'Making love' takes the easy way out

'Making Love'
Michael Ontkean, Kate Jackson Valley River Twin

Michael Ontkean is Zack Elliott, a young doctor with a lovely wife, a new house, an old Austin-Healey and a problem. After eight years of marriage, he discovers that he's attracted to other men.

Kate Jackson (ex-Charlie's Angel) is Claire, his wife. She's a network exec who's out to bring intelligent programming to American television. She senses that something's happening to her storybook marriage, and confronts Zack, confident that "whatever it is, we can handle it."

"What it is" is another man, who Zack decides he must be with at the cost of all else. Harry Hamlin plays Bart, a gay writer who likes looking at his body and hates lasting relationships.

Jackson and Ontkean are excellent. They give their parts life, and make the audience share in the pain of their situation. In the confrontation scenes, Jackson brings out a strength in her character at the same time she is denying the situation and grasping for solutions. The direction is also good. Arthur ("Silver Streak,"

"Love Story") Hiller ties everything together nicely into a tight, well-produced package that sails along well, even in pretty tricky spots, such as when Zack and Bart kiss (thankfully the most explicit the film gets).

After that, however, it gets into rough waters. It brings up a powerful topic, then ignores a crucial aspect of it.

Homosexuality is more than a social issue; it's a moral one as well. Screenwriter Barry Sandler seems to have forgotten this. None of the characters wonders whether there are any moral implications to his actions.

Screenwriter Barry Sandler seems to have forgotten homosexuality is more than a social issue.

Right and wrong are reduced to the mentality of one of Bart's lines: "Life is too short to play games. If it feels good, do it."

I find it hard to believe that our society's morals have crumbled so far that someone considering homosexuality wouldn't even stop to question the implications of his actions further than wondering if the guy he went to bed with would still be there in the morning. Zack treats the decision of his sexuality with less moral thought than most of use when deciding which candidate to vote for.

To make matters worse, Sandler sees Zack's "homosexual urges" as part of a mysterious, uncontrollable disease that strikes without notice, forcing him to change his entire life. Homosexuality becomes an untreatable illness, as is shown in one scene when Bart says to Zack, "Physician, heal thyself." The audience leaves the theater with the terrible fear, "It might happen to me!"

"Making Love" takes the easy way out and doesn't bother with morality, God, personal choice, or tricky stuff like that. Instead, it spends its time telling us that "homosexuals are people, too" and that "homosexuality is a valid way of life." Because it only shows one side of the issue, it comes off as a slickly-produced advertisement for the gay movement, but doesn't really get to the heart of the issue.

DONATE YOUR SUPERFLUOUS BOOKS

Now that the golden days of just markets, bombs, and breadlines are just around the corner, and ignorant rug peddlers are busy weaving disaster for the future of higher education, it is imperative we take a stand for the University.

Knowledge, being just another commodity, should, by republican logic, be drawn of itself to Salem, where it is most needed. Apparently, a visible hand is necessary. We all can assist this process by donating books to the Atiyeh Reference Library.

Simply mail all your books (preferable economics texts) rendered superfluous by budget cuts, department closures, termination of professors, etc. to:

Atiyeh Reference Library
c/o Governor's Office
Salem, Oregon 97301

Duplicate copies will be recycled to provide paper for the budget estimates by the economist in the Governor's office.

A careful tally will be kept of all your donations. The person mailing the largest number of volumes by July 1, 1982, will win an all expenses paid weekend with the governor at the Hotel Honolulu, to attend the Second Annual "Trickle Down Retreat." 2-17
