

Gymnasts travel to OSU for Shanico Cup

The Oregon women's gymnastics team will face its biggest test of the season when it travels to Corvallis tonight for the eight-team Shanico Cup Invitational.

The Ducks will face second-ranked Oregon State, along with Washington, Washington State, Oklahoma, Ohio State, Brigham Young University and Southern California.

"We're shooting for a 140," says assistant coach Kurt Krichko. "It should be a very close meet," adds Krichko. "After Oregon State, the teams are well matched, and everything is up for grabs."

The Beavers should win the meet easily, as Utah, not earlier thought to be in the meet, will not be there. Utah defeated OSU 146.50 to 145.05 in dual meet competition last weekend.

Once again, Oregon will be without Sara Gustafson in the all-around.

Gustafson, still nursing an injured finger, will compete in the vault, on the floor exercise and on the beam. Her 8.55 mark was enough to win the beam in last week's win over Spokane Community College.

A particularly bright spot in the meet was freshman Julie Tennenhouse, who tied for first with Holly Holmes in the all-around and earned a personal best of 9.05 on the vault.

Another high note for the Ducks will be the injury situation — everyone should be healthy besides Gustafson. "All the girls had the flu last week," says Krichko, "and if we can score 135 when everybody had the flu, we should do pretty well."

Krichko is hoping for a second-place finish in the meet. However, Oregon has lost to Oregon State and Washington in dual meets and been outscored by USC and WSU in two others.

The Oregon men's swim team has taken its 13-1 dual meet record north to Seattle this week to compete in the Northern Pacific Swimming Championships Thursday through Saturday.

The dual victory over Oregon State Saturday gave the Ducks their best dual meet record in at least five years, and their 23rd consecutive winning season.

Although records on the swim team are incomplete until the 1977-78 season, the men are believed to have compiled their best record since finishing in the top 10 of the NCAA meet in the late 1960s.

The Ducks only dual meet loss this year was to perennial swimming power, Washington, the host school for this week's Nor-Pac Championships.

The Oregon golf team tees off its season Saturday in the Stanford Invitational in Palo Alto, Calif.

The young Oregon team has two juniors, seven sophomores and one freshman. All but freshman Paul Weinhold have participated in the NCAA match.

HOLLYWOOD, Fla. (AP) — Opening talks between representatives of National Football League players and owners continued to flounder Thursday, amid confusion about whether management had agreed to open its books to the players' union.

The disagreement stemmed from an appearance by Jack Donlan, executive director of the NFL Management Council, on the "CBS Morning News" before the talks resumed here Thursday.

Donlan said that he simply repeated an offer first made by the owners in a Jan. 19 letter to the union. The letter offered to allow the union to hire one of the Big Eight auditing firms to review figures compiled for management by Arthur Andersen Co.

The result, which the league offered to the union, is called an "anonymous audit" which shows the profit or loss of a so-called average team.

After Donlan's TV appearance, Ed Garvey, executive director of the NFL Players Association, said he interpreted Donlan's statements to mean that the union could audit the books of all 28 NFL teams.

"We expect to begin examining the league's financial records immediately," Garvey said.

However, when informed of Garvey's comments, Donlan said he was merely repeating what had been offered before. He accused Garvey of trying to confuse the public by giving the impression that the offer was new.
