Victoria: A little bit of England

You'd love to go to England, but you can't afford to fly over the ocean, and you can't get enough air into the tires to drive across. What to do?

Luckily, there's a little bit of England only a few hours north of Eugene. Victoria, British Columbia, may not have Buckingham Palace and Chuck and Di, but it makes a good substitute for a few days' vacation. Especially now, when rates are low and the weather is nice.

The place to stay in Victoria is the Empress, a 70-year-old grand hotel in the grandest style, which is British through and through. Unfortunately, its 400-some rooms are usually booked up well in advance, and the price is a bit steep for more than a couple of days.

There are a number of inexpensive, clean little places near the Empress at more reasonable cost. If you have a little extra money, The Olde England Inn boasts centuries-old antiques in every room, and prices start from around $30.

Even during this time of year, the Butchart Gardens have something in bloom, and are well worth the time for a leisurely stroll. Prices in the off-season are a lot lower than when tourists crowd every peaceful corner of the terribly British gardens during summer, and it's an excellent way to unwind after those nasty finals.

Perhaps the most British thing in Victoria is High Tea at the Empress. From 2:30 to 4 p.m. they cover the tables with white tablecloths and the stately lobby becomes a massive tea parlour. Everyone sits in the huge armchairs sipping tea, nibbling crumpets and scones and having a jolly good time.

After that, there's the Crystal Gardens to wander through. The Crystal Gardens is a huge glass building built in 1925, then enclosing a swimming pool and restaurants. It has very recently been remodeled, and now is something of a giant greenhouse, filled with fountains, plants and exotic birds. There's even a cafe, so if you miss tea at the Empress, you can have it overlooking the gardens.

And then there's the Craigdarroch Castle, the Provincial Museum, the Government buildings, the Captain's Palace, the nightclubs... enough for a long break from the books.

It may not be England really. But since it's only eight hours away by car, and easily accessible by bus — it's bloody easy to pretend.
