

ble to incoming freshmen.

"I honestly don't think I could advise a talented, serious gymnast to come to Oregon right now," Gustafson said. "I would want so badly to support my school, but I just couldn't do it."

Putting this year's problems aside, however, isn't difficult for Gustafson, who looks at her career as being most fulfilling.

"I'm better than I've ever been right now, and if the scores don't reflect that, you just have to accept it," Gustafson said. "I judge my performance by how I felt I did, not by the score they flash up. The score is big for the crowd, but not for the gymnast."

Gustafson said she'll be relieved when she finally reaches the end of this season and draws to a close her life in competitive gymnastics.

"I can't wait... I don't know when I've gotten home before 6 or 7:30," she says. "Not being able to see the sun, you just go straight through the morning, the afternoon, and then it's off to the gym."

But she admits she'll have difficulty staying away from gymnastics.

"Sure, after a couple of months, I'll probably want to go back to the gym. Yeah, I'm going to miss it," she said.

Likewise, what's left of Oregon women's gymnastics will probably miss her as well.
