Last stand for Duck men

USC, UCLA round out Oregon home schedule

By Jeff Dickerson
 Of the Emerald

Like an acting troupe walking onto a stage for a play that has failed miserably at the box office and in the columns of critics, Jim Haney and his beleaguered basketball squad make one last homestand this weekend.

And if the Ducks haven't already had their share of problems, their opponents for this weekend's games, USC and UCLA, have proven to be particularly tough on the Webfoots, especially in McArthur Court.

In Haney's four years as coach of the Ducks, Oregon is 2-6 in Mac Court against the Southern California schools.

Compounding Oregon's woes is the Pac-10 schedule, which allowed them two days to practice before their final home weekend begins and only 15 hours between the two games.

"We just got back from Washington State Tuesday (following a 76-69 loss to the Cougars)," Haney says, "and that isn't a lot of time to prepare to play anybody." The Ducks face the Trojans at 7:35 p.m. Friday and must bounce back to take on UCLA in a 1 p.m. contest Saturday, which will be televised on the West Coast.

Fortunately for Oregon, both opponents are similar in styles of play, Haney said.

Both are strong inside with more than adequate rebounders, he said. Both play man-to-man defense and utilize their offensive and defensive quickness to pressure their opponents at both ends of the court. The Ducks will have to be at the top of their game mentally and physically if they are to stand a chance against either of the two schools, he says.

"We are going to have to show more poise against the press," Haney says, "but we also have to do a good job rebounding the ball. We aren't going to dominate the backboard with the outstanding talent they have underneath, but we will have to hold our own against them."
