United States bans Libyan oil imports

WASHINGTON

The United States banned all oil imports from Libya Wednesday and accused Col. Moammar Khadafy's militant Arab regime of an "outrageous plan" to assassinate American officials and their families in Sudan.

A senior U.S. official said the plot was broken up last November before two stereo speakers packed with plastic explosives could be flown from an unidentified neighboring country to Khartoum, Sudan, where they were to be placed in the American social club.

The official, who spoke on the condition his name not be used, said the devices were prepared by Libyan intelligence officers and could have killed or maimed hundreds of U.S. Embassy workers and their families at a weekend dance.

The "particularly horrible mission" was cited as one reason for ending oil imports from Libya and blocking sale of American oil and gas technology to that country.

The senior official, who briefed reporters after State Department spokesman Dean Fishcer read the announcement, said current contracts would not be interrupted.

The United States imports about 150,000 barrels of oil a day from Libya. This represents a tiny fraction of U.S. oil imports. Libya's principal European customers are Greece, Turkey and Italy.

Abscam senator may give up fight

WASHINGTON

Harrison Williams has made a tentative decision to resign from the Senate and quit fighting a recommendation that he be expelled for Abscam crimes, knowledgeable congressional sources said Wednesday.

The sources, who asked not to be identified, said there is still a slight possibility that Williams might change his mind before the Senate takes a vote on a resolution to expel the New Jersey Democrat.

One source described Williams as being in a "highly emotional state of mind," and cited that reason for hesitation about his intentions.

But as of late Wednesday night, the sources said, Williams had told at least one Senate colleague that he would resign after 23 years in the Senate.

It was not clear if Williams would yield before the Senate votes on a proposal that he receive a lesser penalty, censure, urged by those who believe he was the victim of FBI and prosecutorial abuse.

The censure vote was certain to fail. It would be followed by a vote on the expulsion resolution recommended unanimously by the Senate ethics committee.

Sources who asked not to be identified said a number of Democrats, including Williams' chief defender, Daniel Inouye of Hawaii, and Senate Minority Leader Robert Byrd were urging Williams to give up.

Publicly, Williams and his aides continued to insist that he would fight to the end to resist expulsion.

BPA dams filled to overflowing

PORTLAND

The Bonneville Power Administration has more water than it can handle, and is allowing some of it to spill over dams without being used to generate electricity.

BPA spokesman Bill Murlin said the federal power agency began selling excess electricity Feb. 17. He says water conditions are the best they have been since 1976.

"We're awash in water right now," Murlin said.

Snowpack in the Columbia River Basin is 110 percent of normal, with the BPA predicting the runoff this year to total 126 million acre-feet. An acre-foot is an acre of water one foot deep.

The BPA, which acts as broker for most electricity generated in the Pacific Northwest, obtains most of its electricity from its system of hydroelectric dams on the Columbia River.

Most of the BPA's electricity is sold to public utilities and exchanged for more expensive power from private utilities.

The agency is selling 3,000 megawatts of surplus power each day, with 85 to 90 percent of it going to California, Murlin said.

Between Feb. 17 and March 7, the BPA earned $432,000 per day by selling surplus power, for a total of $7.77 million.
