Ewing awes basketball futurists

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — It was like watching a house burn to the ground, or slowing down to gawk at multicar accident on the highway.

Patrick Ewing possesses an awesome, even frightening, power that draws eyes to him. His presence is demanding. It demands attention.

With some 61,000 in attendance at the Louisiana Superdome — and another several million watching on national television — Ewing gave the performance of a lifetime last Monday night. He gave millions a glimpse into the future — of what might be the next year, or the year after as he continues to learn his trade at Georgetown University.

In a losing effort in the national collegiate basketball championships, the 7-foot freshman who began life in Jamaica gave the basketball-watching public something to look forward to.

Ewing had 23 points and 11 rebounds against North Carolina. He committed zero turnovers, blocked two shots legally against perhaps the best frontline in college, and he had three steals. He shot 10 of 15 from the floor, a percentage of 66.6 percent.

In the first seven minutes of the game, Ewing was whistled for goaltending four times. He batted away one shot by North Carolina center Sam Perkins from at least two feet above the rim.

"We tried to establish a consciousness of his presence under the basket," Thompson, the Georgetown coach, said.

The presence took little establishing, but what astonished Tar Heels Coach Dean Smith was Ewing's offensive capabilities.

"I was amazed at Pat Ewing," Smith said. "He has not shot that well in tapes that I watched. Sam had a hand up on him, and he still made them."

"Our team won't be intimidated against anybody, but not only is Ewing a great shotblocker, he made some shots that showed he could play offense," Smith said. "That's the teaching of John."
